2018

Arcade Fire - Everything Now

Joe DeMars
University of the Pacific, j_demars1@u.pacific.edu

Joe DeMars (2018) is pursuing a degree in Music Industry Studies.

This article was written as part of the curriculum for the Bachelor of Music in Music Management and the Bachelor of Science in Music Industry Studies at University of the Pacific. Each student conducted research based on his or her own areas of interest and study.

To learn more about the program, visit: go.pacific.edu/musicindustry

All images used from album covers are included under the Fair Use provision of U.S. Copyright law and remain the property of their respective copyright owners.

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarlycommons.pacific.edu/backstage-pass

Part of the Music Commons

Recommended Citation

Available at: https://scholarlycommons.pacific.edu/backstage-pass/vol1/iss1/2

This Concert and Album Review is brought to you for free and open access by the Conservatory of Music at Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Backstage Pass by an authorized editor of Scholarly Commons. For more information, please contact mgibney@pacific.edu.
Everything Now - Arcade Fire
By Joe DeMars

July’s Everything Now is perhaps the first hiccup in Arcade Fire’s seamless progression as the innovative, emotive indie icons we accepted as cultural canon with 2004’s Funeral. A hodgepodge of stand-out highlights and head-scratching missteps, simultaneously capable and lacking, Everything Now fumbles in delivering the effortless consistency you have come to expect from the prophetic songsters.

Framed by the distressed-turned-disco melody of its title track, Everything Now prepares the listener for a line-up of tunes that find a sure-footed groove to drive lyrics defining and distrusting the crowded frivolity of our modern world. The thumping bass and grating strings of “Signs of Life” carry this theme forward, followed by the unforgottably explosive “Creature Comfort.” A major highlight of the record, “Creature Comfort” chases its own tail with melodic echoes from the likes of Neon Bible supplementing Butler’s bombastic cry: “On and on I don’t know what I want! On and on I don’t know if I want it!”

Showcasing an empathy steeped in bitterness, Butler’s imagery and declarative delivery leaves an impression that’s strangely Dylanesque amidst this synth-infused champion of a track.
And then? It is easy to recall how bewildered and disappointed I found myself during the 5 song slump that follows, which all but halts the thriving build-up of Everything Now. “Peter Pan”, “Chemistry”, and “Good God Damn” combine experimental soundscapes with an uncharacteristically campy array of vocal chorus hooks, all the while straying further and further from the promising theme of the record’s opening stanza. Likewise, the bizarre garage rock, beachside combination of tracks “Infinite Content” and “Infinite_Content” (yes, that’s real) exist as an odd, pretentious wink that may make you double check the packaging to confirm that this is still, indeed, Arcade Fire’s fifth studio album, Everything Now. Perhaps all this is done so that when Chassagne’s melodic pipes come drifting atop the hip-shaking “Electric Blue,” you may actually cry with relief. While “Put Your Money On Me” still seems an odd thematic fit, its earnest sentiment and thoughtful harmonies won me out after a second listen and set up an intriguing shift into the transformative, spun-out “We Don’t Deserve Love.” A final message before the album close, this track’s somber, self-critical verses and acoustic strumming, bell chiming chorus will stay with you longer after each additional listen.

A disappointment only by expectation, Everything Now can still boast a lineup of strengths that outshine its weaknesses.