STORY

It All Depends On Me

This pageant, which was written by members of the graduating class, is designed to answer the critics who believe that young people of today are not concerned about world problems. Those writing the pageant wished to show that they not only realize the responsibilities they have in making a better world, but that they are planning definite action to make the place of the Nisei more secure, to bring about better racial understandings, and to do their part in winning the war, and in making a secure peace. The pageant pays tribute to the large contribution made by Nisei servicemen to the acceptance of all American Japanese.

Scene I

Five graduating seniors discuss their plans for relocation, and the contributions which they can make to a country at war.

Scene II

A Nisei soldier on the battlefront is reading to his pal, a letter from his sister. They hear her voice, and the commencement talks which she describes.
