The Society of Women Engineers, along with the School of Engineering and Computer Science, have put together two fun-filled events for the 2011 Alumni Weekend.

The John T. Chambers Technology Center, designed to meet LEED Gold standards, opened in fall 2010 and has provided the School of Engineering and Computer Science with a new, exciting, and innovative teaching and learning environment. The façade has an artistic design that not only gives the building a distinctive look but also holds secret messages that can only be discovered through a decoding process.

The Society of Women Engineers and the School of Engineering and Computer Science would like to challenge you to decode the messages. The only requirement, as with any puzzle, is that you NEVER tell anyone else the answer. Part of the mystery and fun is to get the satisfaction of decoding the secret messages yourself.

Your task, is to decode the two embedded messages on the front of the Chambers Technology Center, which are encoded in ASCII. You will need to be able to go from binary (base 2 coding) to hexadecimal (base 16 coding) to ASCII characters. We are willing to give you some hints to help you along. The following provides information on how to perform the translations. If you have questions about the process, stop by the Society of Women Engineers booth on Anderson Lawn during Alumni Weekend.

We will not give you the answer, but we will provide pointers.

Binary and hexadecimal representation: Each binary digit is called a bit. Binary values can take on two states: 0 or 1. Hexadecimal is a base 16 representation. HEX digits include 0-9 and A-F. The Binary to HEX Conversion table shows that it takes four bits to represent one HEX digit.

ASCII: ASCII (American Standard Code for Information Interchange) is the standard code used in computing. Each ASCII character is represented as an 8-bit (two hex digits) sequence of data. This ASCII chart to the left is the HEX (hexadecimal) representation of each of the ASCII characters, read across the top and then down the side. Each ASCII character is two HEX digits. For example HEX 47 is the character 'G'.

Decoding Process:

The messages are made up of 8-bit sequences, each separated by a color. Each brick square represents a 1 or a 0. The 1's and 0's of the second message are differentiated by height (flat or raised) of the brick square.

REMEMBER: AS WITH ANY GOOD PUZZLE - DO NOT GIVE AWAY THE ANSWER TO ANYONE... MAKE THEM FIGURE IT OUT.
