THE PRAELDE TO WINTER

Tule Lake's well known cold winter is gradually making itself felt among the shivering colonists, following a short period of warm spell.

After an extremely hot and sultry day 'Mother Nature' turned around and brought storm clouds hovering over the center. Before the beginning of the shower the wind blow the powder-like dust particles swarming throughout the colony. Amid the whirling dust storms, the residents closed windows and doors hoping to escape from the smothering white inferno. And in that moment of sudden stillness, before the storm, the quietness of the camp was awe-inspiring. Not a soul was in sight, in fact, even the dogs were whimpering indoors wondering what was coming up.

Following the flash of lightning and the sound of the low rumbling thunder, sheets of rain drops enveloped the center giving it one of the first thorough drenchings. As if by a stroke of God, the white screen of dust covering the colony disappeared for a short while.

Not satisfied with bringing rain as the first sign of winter, 'ole 'Mother Nature' introduced the chilly north wind so well known by the Tuleans. Early morning frost that covers the barrack roofs is another sign of the impending Tule Lake winter.
