Hidden Treasures at Pacific

In Spring 2015 the Holt-Atherton Special Collections & Archives (HASCA) at University of the Pacific began a book collection inventory. Through this inventory it was found that almost 700 essential titles in the collection were not in the catalog and, thus, undiscoverable. Creating a core collection, using the revamped Collection Development Policy and focusing on the mission statement of HASCA, became a departmental goal. With more intellectual control of the book collection, outreach to faculty/departments is easier. Targeted development of HASCA resources for personalized assignments or an orientation session geared toward the course subject area is now available.

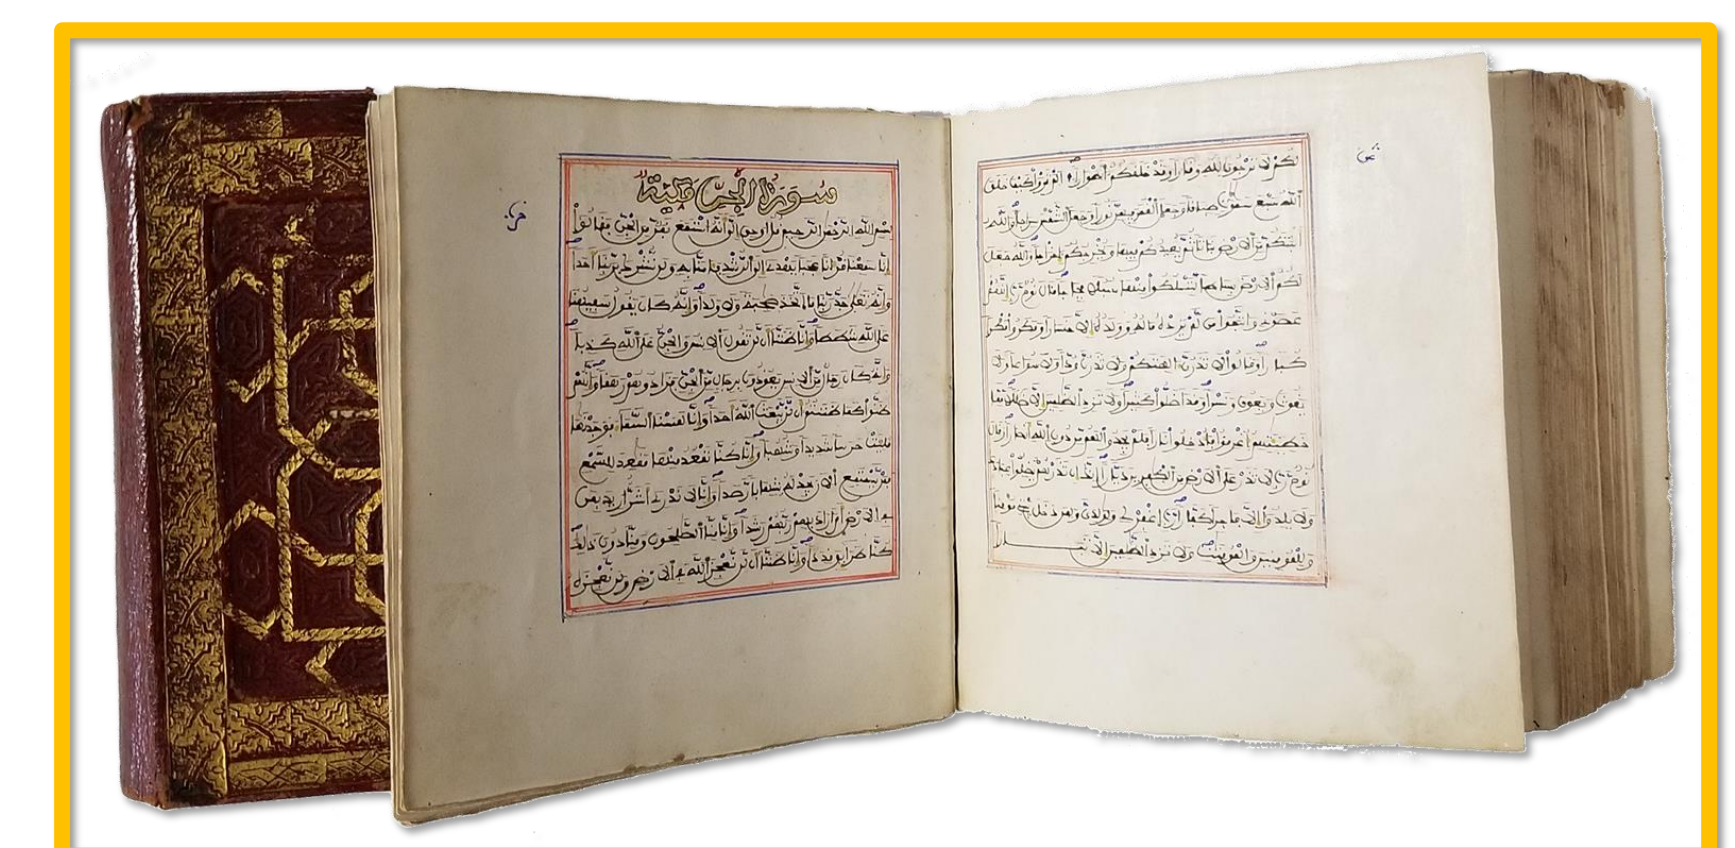

Some previously uncatalogued items make nice eye candy and come in handy during HASCA orientation classes to illustrate the rareness of our book collection.

Religion, Race, Justice in US

Many of the older titles were religious in nature and are excellent primary examples of historical text for classes in the university's Religious Studies program.

American Immigration

Urban Anthropology

California and Stockton material can be used in community member tours and classes directed at local history and genealogical research. Also many titles can be used in various classes targeting diversity and immigration in California and Stockton.
