Students Chat with President Eibeck at UC Fire Pit

On October 4th, President Eibeck opened up a fireside chat with concerned students at the McCaffrey Center. Dressed in a gray Pacific sweater and accompanied by her Golden Retriever Gracie, Eibeck greeted students and staff sitting around the fire pit. After introductions of name and year, Eibeck opened the conversation by asking if there was “anything in particular” that the students wanted to talk about.

“We just wanted to say hello, you’re kind of an elusive character I suppose.” Commented Andy Hansen, first year Graduate Student at Pacific. “We know that you’re here but sometimes it’s just like, where is she?” Not only did students have a chance to see the President in person that evening, but the fireside chat also allowed them to interact with her and discuss topics of their choice.

One particular issue that was brought up before the president was made by David Creel, Senior in Music Management. Concerning the stage that used to be at the McCaffrey Center, Creel mentioned that Pacific could “definitely do a lot of programming there and bring a lot of music out to a nice stage outside the Grove.” He was hoping to see if President Eibeck could “look into” the situation of a “financial standoff” that appears to be in place amidst the efforts to rebuild a stage there.

When asked what was on his mind, Bryant Gregory, sophomore in International Relations, also raised some ideas on improvement around campus. On the topic of safety and “how to make Stockton more of a college city” Gregory brought up various ideas to make walkways around campus “more safe and inviting for students to walk down on.”

President Eibeck acknowledged the “important” things that Gregory touched and continued to talk about the measures Pacific was taking to improve campus security. “Safety is a big issue on our mind” she explained.

Not only is Pacific consulting experts and observing the tactics of other campuses around the U.S but they are also discussing the ideas of an increase in lighting and implementing cameras for monitoring.

Despite the light rain, students stayed around the fire pit and joined in on the discussion with their own opinions and feedback of experience with campus public safety. The conversation topics that evening ranged from talking about Tiger Nights, Pacific’s Swing Dance Club, and the Board of Regents Meeting on Residence Halls, the political situation in Egypt to the financial situation of a “financial standoff” that appears to be in place amidst the efforts to rebuild a stage there.

There will be more opportunities to talk to the President later this month and next month. On Tuesday October 18th and November 29th she will have open office hours from 4:30PM to 6PM.

National Breast Cancer Awareness Month

FranShawn Croft
STAFF WRITER

Every October marks National Breast Cancer Awareness Month, which is currently in its 27th year as an organization. It was started by the National Cancer Society and the pharmaceutical company Imperial Chemical Industries (NBCAM).

NBCAM is an international annual health campaign that has progressed from promoting mammograms to raising funds for many things such as breast cancer research, treatment, and ultimately the annihilation of the disease.

This year for National Breast Cancer Awareness Month, The University of the Pacific is participating in the 15th annual Lee Denim Day. The University has formed a team and is asking for participants to join in and stand with them in the “fight” against breast cancer.

Since 1996 the “one day, one cause, one cure” philosophy has raised more than $83 million for the ongoing battle against a cancer that affects so many women and even men.

The concept of the program is to get companies to go casual for a day, and have the employees donate $5 to wear their denim jeans to work.

The Where and How of Your Future
Pacific Hosts Research and Graduate School Info Session

Karla Cortez

It’s the beginning of a new school year at Pacific and for upperclassmen, it is also a time to start planning for life after college. There are many options available to all Pacific students, from going to law school, medical school, entering a graduate program or joining the Peace Corps. The question is, what do you want as an individual, where do you want to work, and who do you want to be working with?

Last Wednesday, September 28th, the Career Resource Center offered 4 information sessions throughout the day, offering students advice on how one can go about applying for graduate or professional programs. There was a session devoted to financial aid, law school, and other graduate programs as well as one focusing on the international studies programs. The third information session was hosted by Diane Farrell, the director of the Career Resource Center and Cirena Sweetland-Gil, the director of Graduate School Operations here at University of the Pacific.

Diane focused her presentation on students who are unsure about what they want to do after college. She offered a few words of advice, namely that applying to graduate school is a decision that should not be taken lightly. Farrell stressed not to obtain an advanced degree without figuring out your career goals and how the degree you want relates to them. Also, she stated that the best reasons to continue your education is because it is necessary for your career or because you love your subject. “Bad reasons” she claimed are because you’re afraid you won’t be able to find a job, or you don’t know what else to do.

However, regardless of your reason Farrell would still direct all students to the Career Resource Center for further one-on-one assistance. Services that are offered for Pacific students at the center range from discussing goals and relevant programs to decision making strategies, application time-lines, interview practice, and resume feedback.

Representing the office of Research and Graduate Studies, Cirena Sweetland-Gil encourages Pacific students to take advantage of the research and graduate studies information on their website which can be accessed from the right sidebar of the Pacific.edu home page. University of the Pacific offers a wide range of advanced degrees in law, physical therapy, education, psychology and many other fields of study. Even if you are looking to continue furthering your education elsewhere, the website still offers information on Graduate school applications, deadlines, and program minimum requirements.

Cirena also stressed the importance of knowing that graduate programs “can open doors and close doors at the same time”. You must be willing to work hard and be committed to a program that is in a completely different league than undergraduate school she continued. Farrell outlined “important factors in getting admitted to a program. They are: relationships with professors for good references, conducting undergraduate research, and having good academic standing and test scores.”

Personal stories were also discussed when asked what the important part of a graduate school application was. Kevin responded, “The letter of intent, it helps the committee see you as an individual.”

So if you’re like many of the other upperclassmen and still aren’t sure about the future, it may be time to sit down and figure out what you want to do. Pacific has tools for students and encourages students to take advantage of these tools in a manner. According to Farrell, start junior year and don’t wait until you go to a career advising program right after your undergraduate degree. And always remember, have clear career goals and start making steps towards them now.

Next week on October 11th the Career Resource Center and Pacific Alumni Association will be hosting the 2011 "You" Make a Difference Day. The event will take place in the new Alex & Jeri Vereschagin Alumni House from 3:00 - 5:00pm. As a follow up to the Welcome Weekend M.O.V.E program, this event aims to provide Pacific students with the opportunity to further give back to their communities.

Elizabeth Youngberg and Rho Pi Phi Co-Host Pacific Blood Drive

STAFF WRITER

Rho Pi Phi, an international pharmaceutical fraternity, co-hosted a blood drive with Elizabeth Youngberg last Thursday in coordination with the local Delta Blood Bank here at Pacific. The event was held in honor of Stephen Polster, a student at the University of the Pacific who passed away in a tragic skiing accident. Stephen Polster was a regular blood donor, whose blood and organs were able to assist and save the lives of over 50 people. Stephen was an Economics major, and was active within the Pacific community.

At the beginning, a panel presentation by community leaders will take place to start off the event. Afterwards, students, faculty, alumni, and staff will be able to interact with community leaders and learn more about their organizations and how to get involved. This also includes any opportunities for current or future internship and entry-level jobs.

Representatives that will be at the "You" Make a Difference Day include but are not limited to: Stockton Arts Commission, State of California - California Conservation Corps, San Joaquin County Sheriff's Department, American Red Cross, Women's Center of San Joaquin, Federal Bureau of Investigation, and Peace Corps.

Refreshments will be served at the event and the admission is free and open to all. In order to better accommodate class and work schedules the "You" Make a Difference Day allows attendees to stop by and leave freely.

Dr. Carlos Munoz Speaks at Pacific

Jesse Voelkert
STAFF WRITER

A professor of Ethnic Studies at U.C. Berkeley, Dr. Carlos Munoz gave a speech at the University of the Pacific regarding the struggle to create a multicultural democracy, which is the subject of his upcoming book "The Challenge for an Authentic Multiracial Democracy in America". Dr. Munoz's words garnered reactions from those who came to see him speak, with instances of spontaneous applause after some of his key points.

The audience itself was very diverse, with large numbers of Hispanics, African-Americans, and Caucasians, reflecting Dr. Munoz's observation that "We are witnessing the most profound demographic revolution in our nation's history." Both the history of previous political movements regarding multiculturalism were discussed, as well as recent events such as the bake sale protesting affirmative action at Dr. Munoz's own U.C. Berkeley.

The focal point of Dr. Munoz's speech was a call for revolution. Statements such as "we have a two-party dictatorship" were used, and the objective of changing the established political and economic structure was a major point of discussion. Dr. Munoz stated "we need to evolve ourselves and decolonize our minds."

After the initial speech, the floor was opened up to a Q&A session between the audience and Dr. Munoz. Here, Dr. Munoz answered questions delving further into how one might accomplish the goal of a multicultural democracy and how capitalism influences this goal. Also, more information regarding the "Chicano" political movement was investigated, the subject on which Dr. Munoz has published an award winning novel.

The end of his lecture was marked by the words: "what I have learned in talking about this dream with you... is that life is struggle, and struggle is life... and victory is in the struggle." After the presentation, Dr. Munoz stayed to meet with audience members, sign books, and take pictures with fans.

Nationally Recognized Dr. Elizabeth Molina Morgan to Speak in Stockton

Natalie B. Compton
STAFF WRITER

On October 26th, renowned education reformer Dr. Elizabeth Molina Morgan will headline the University of the Pacific’s first Dialogues of Distinction event at Amos Alonzo Stagg High School.

Dr. Morgan, executive director of the National Superintendent of Unified School Districts’ facilities to be “dropout factories,” or schools where no more than 60 percent of freshmen graduate.

The event, a part of Pacific’s “Beyond Our Gates” initiative, will bring 200 influential leaders in the community together to come up with ways to put Dr. Morgan’s ideas for San Joaquin County into motion. Dr. Morgan, who holds a PhD in administration from American University in Washington, D.C., has a broad history in education reform including nine years as a superintendent of Washington County (MD) public Schools where she increased the graduation rate from 78 to 92 percent. This type of success made her the perfect candidate to lead the America’s Promise Alliance initiative, Grad Nation. The initiative aims to rally the country together to stop and reverse the national dropout crisis.

In addition to her work with Grad Nation, Dr. Morgan has also joined the Coalition for Educational Success’ Board of Advisors, an association that advocates for policies supporting wider access to higher education.

The first-generation American leader has been showered with accolades for her work in improving education. She recently received the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Association of Latino Administrators and Superintendents in 2011, a tribute revered as the highest honor given by Latinos to commemorate cultural pride and accomplishment in America. She has also received Nancy S. Grasmick Excellence in Minority Achievement Award, and The American Association of School Administrators’ 2010 National Superintendent of the Year.

The goals of Dr. Morgan’s Grad Nation tie directly with those of Pacific’s Beyond Our Gates forums. Throughout the forum series, convened by University President Pamela A. Elbeek, various aspects of community life were examined to discover what could be improved. One of the main concerns of the community was education reform, and the upcoming Dialogues of Distinction will deal solely in this issue.

Hosted by President Elbeek and the Beyond Our Gates Community Council, the event will run from 8 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. The Dialogue is free of charge and open to the public. For more information on the event, contact the Jacoby Center at 209.946.7444.

The Affordable Care Act and the Supreme Court: The Republican and Democratic Viewpoints

Constitutional or Unconstitutional: That is the Question

Mitchell Woerner
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

With a new Supreme Court team, we'll see whether the health care law issue will be brought before the Supreme Court. Now there's only one issue with the bill: the individual mandate. It's been the focus of every single district and circuit court case. Now personally, I don't even like the individual mandate because we're forced to buy private health care insurance for which prices haven't gone down, and we don't have any alternatives, such as a public option. So if the individual mandate were to be ruled unconstitutional, I wouldn't mind.

The rest of the law doesn't have any question of whether it's constitutional or not, as it's just reforming an industry that has had many problems for the past couple decades. The law is not a government takeover of the health care system. Unless you're retired or fit the standards for Medicaid, your only option is private health insurance, and the spending in the bill ends up going to people so that they can buy private health care insurance. From the viewpoint of a progressive like myself, the Affordable Care Act doesn't go far enough. We still have to buy expensive private insurance, and a public option is absolutely necessary to help lower prices. It's another case of Obama going for just a little bit of change, as opposed to the real reform he promised in his campaign.

The law isn't all bad. It insures 44 million people, and in a country where 44,000 people die each year because of a lack of health care insurance, it is definitely needed. It also covers people with pre-existing conditions, and ever since the bill has spawned we've heard countless stories about those that haven't been covered because of a pre-existing condition. But whether or not you like the law doesn't really matter, as there is quite a difference between liking a law and questioning its constitutionality.

The health care law has gone under review several times since its passing and will be the key to how the Supreme Court eventually decides whether the mandate, and perhaps the law itself is unconstitutional. A number of courts have thrown out lawsuits against the law without entirely considering it a question, but there have been four different federal district courts that have made decisions regarding the law. Two are in favor of the mandate, and two are against it, while one judge who struck down the mandate also said the whole law was unconstitutional as well. The other judge who struck down the mandate said a court to allow Medicare and Social Security. However, because Congress didn't explicitly state the mandate was a form of taxation, the Appeals court rejected that argument.

TheObama administration's goal is to keep the law, and they want the justices to mainly decide between whether the mandate gets upheld or not, and whether the Republican Party or the Democratic Party is responsible for the law. If the Supreme Court decides to go with the 6th Circuit decisions, ignoring the technical law found in 4th's decision, What will the Supreme Court decide? It's not even a question; it will definitely be a decision. My gut is telling me that the mandate will be struck down, but the entire law in place. The reason why this is because if the Supreme Court decided to go with a District Court Judge who struck the mandate down, they'd have a case against every single judge that has touched the case.

The court is conservative, but other than a few decades where they have strayed from an activist court, It's hard to predict the Supreme Court. Yet it'll be even harder to tell the oral argument that has been waiting. Until then, we just have to wait and see.

Obamacare: The Aftermath. So Far

Morgan Hendley
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

My evaluation of Obamacare could easily turn into a rant about how taxes will increase, how Obamacare will have adverse consequences in regards to patient care, how this plan will raise the deficit, and how it will evolve healthcare into a DMV-esque socialistic nightmare.

However, as tempting and true as those arguments may be I will limit my evaluation of Obamacare to only the newest developments that have occurred in the months since its passage.

It has been approximately 18 months since the passage of Obamacare. What developments have we seen thus far in the healthcare world as a result? We see mainly reforms made in an effort to protect consumers from private insurance companies in the form of the patient bill of rights as well as making healthcare more affordable for individuals.

The Democrat rational is that 'strengthen' anything and fix them. This boils down to 'strengthen' anything and fix problems within a program by 'increasing' funding. The Democrat rational is that by increasing funding of Medicare and Medicaid programs the quality of individual care will increase. This is proven false. According to the Heritage Foundation, "Physicians treat Medicaid patients in ways that can negatively impact their health and use fewer guideline-recommended therapies on Medicaid recipients. Medicaid recipients also tend to lack a regular place of care and thus receive a greater proportion of their care in the emergency room, which has been shown to have high rates of medical errors." So to simply increase funding of these programs with little to no reforms fails to solve any of the real problems inherent within the Medicare and Medicaid programs.

To argue the success of Obamacare based off of what we have seen thus far would be arbitrary. We have been seeing minor reforms, which Republicans favor. We have not seen the actual government funded plan of as yet, only traces of it as evident in the proposed budgeting up of Medicare and Medicaid programs without first reforming them. If the government would simply devote their energies to reform instead of expansion then we might actually start to see some improvements with access and quality of care.

Ten Years For Thirty Bucks

Danielle Procope
STAFF WRITER

Patricia Spottedcrow, a 25 year old Oklahoma woman and a mother of four, has been sentenced to ten years in prison for selling $31 of marijuana to an undercover police informant.

As a first time offender and someone who had begun to deal marijuana as a result of losing her job, many believe her sentencing was incredibly harsh. Spottedcrow was offered a plea bargain of two years but refused because she believed she would be sentenced to less time. Many similar offenders, including Spottedcrow's own mother who sold along with her, are only fined and given probation.

In a report given by Judge Susie Pritchett, who presided over the case, she said, "When she needed money ... this is the avenue she chose rather than finding legitimate employment...

The defendant does not appear remorseful ... and she makes justifications for her actions."

Pritchett's words exhibits a blatant disregard for the circumstances that can drive a person to committing illegal activity. It also shows a lack of understanding for the oftentimes necessary means that those in poverty utilize in an effort to support their families. In our now crumbling economy, as the job industry and access to higher education both suffer, poverty climbs.

Poverty drives crime, particularly petty drug offenses. Spottedcrow is a perfect example of this. She worked at a nursing home prior to losing her job and her house. She turned to selling marijuana, a low-level drug with no more negative effects than legal cigarettes, to support her family. And as a result, she has been deemed to be an unfit mother deserving of even more than ten years in prison since the judge called her sentencing "lenient."

High-level and more successful drug dealers often face softer sentences than Spottedcrow because they know to accept plea bargains. Spottedcrow, who as a first-time offender was ignorant of her legal situation, did not take a plea bargain and faced the ultimate result, a life sentence for her children, her husband, and her freedom.

This case should give cause for a stronger critique of the "war on drugs". America has a higher percentage of its citizens incarcerated than any other country because of our emphasis on drug offenses, and particularly because of our emphasis on nonviolent drug offenses as opposed to those for other nonviolent crimes.

The majority of drug arrests are for marijuana possession. Most of the people in prison for drug offenses have never sold high-level drugs. Yet, like Spottedcrow, ten years of their life can be stolen away for their crime.

Our drug policy continually demonstrates a lack of compassion for human life as it chooses harsh punishment over rehabilitation. It continually targets the impoverished and people of color.

The result is not a decrease in drug use or a more peaceable society, as it claims to support. The result is the creation of an ever-growing prison population that would be better off in rehabilitative care, with access to a formal education, and a job market.

The result is increased government emphasis on funding prisons at the expense of institutions of learning and rehabilitation centers. Almost all American prisons are overcrowded. This impacts prisoners' emotional and physical health and raises the likelihood for repeat offenses.

As Americans, we can look at the Spottedcrow case and others like it, and question whether our American legal system has sensible priorities that are for the betterment of society, or if these laws merely oppress already oppressed groups and furthermore hinder society at large.
Where's the Beef?!: Food Truck Review

FranShawn Croft

Just a few feet away from the Psy-Comm building is an inviting structure on wheels that promises to be "Fresh E.A.T (Easy Artisan Takeout)." Students are often gathered around the brightly decorated food truck, and some take advantage of the umbrella covered tables that are available for those who have time to sit and eat in between classes. Normally this is the group I would have targeted to find out their take on the victuals in question, however this time I wanted to take a personal approach.

I had taken a look at the menu at the beginning of the semester and decided it was a bit too pricey. However this week, giving in to my curious palate, I literally ate the cost. I decided to pick three items from the menu.

The first item I devoured was the Cajun fish tacos. The second taste on my list was the pulled pork, and the third was a corned beef breakfast burrito.

I was pleasantly surprised with my tacos, and as I said before, I devoured them, however the pulled pork sandwich requested an introduction to a generous amount of Sweet Baby Ray's Bar-B Sauce before it reached its full potential, but at this point I was on a roll with my menu choices.

I was brought to a disappointing stop when I encountered the corned beef burrito. I may be wrong, but I would like to think that a CORNED BEEF BURRITO should have more than a sliver of CORNED BEEF! I never consume food prior to inspecting it, so naturally when I sat down to enjoy my corned beef burrito I opened it up to take a peek, and to the horror of my anticipating tastebuds it was full of eggs and hashbrowns, and I honestly had to search for the meat! This menu choice was the epitome of an EPIC FAIL! I don’t know if this was and still is "Where's the Beef?" When I decide to treat myself I want my money's worth.

CAJUN FISH TACOS: Two thumbs up
PULLED PORK: One thumb up
CORNED BEEF BURRITO: Three thumbs down. I know I only have two thumbs but I was hoping you’d lend me one of yours to stress my point.

sandwich experience was an isolated event, and really it doesn't matter to me.

With the economic environment being what it is, I want what I pay for. It is already a task being a student trying to balance things out financially, so don't short change me. My question

Credit Cards

Vishal Vasavda
STAFF WRITER

Tigers, let's face facts, we are poor in the real world. Yes, we have some income, eight, nine, ten and if you are lucky eleven dollars an hour, but if you had to live on your own, without any assistance whatsoever, in today's economy, we would have scrap: So, we naturally turn to fake money, or money we don't really have, but can pretend to have. This is also known as a credit card. Credit cards are ingenious, as they provide the user money that he/she does not have at the time, but instead will have (or claim to have) by the end of the month. Credit cards are great tools for those who do not want to carry around sums of cash, but rather, a handy plastic card. With companies like MasterCard, Visa, Discover and Amex, you can literally purchase anything in the world, with a few rules one has to watch out for...

Credit cards are your friend, but at the same time can be your worst enemy. Credit card companies often will go through banks, like Chase, Wells Fargo, Bank of America, etc. This is great, for variety is the essence of capitalism, but is overwhelming at the same time. There are cards with a percentage of cash back on what you spend (up to ~2%, and there are cards that give you bonus points, to spend on iPads, or a canoe or something unique of that sort. So yes, cards seem shiny and fun to have, but if I were you, simplicity beats all. Get a credit card that doesn't have too many stipulations and other conditions/fees.

Without getting into the grimy details, my best recommendation for credit cards is to apply for a college card. This is designated for students, and let's students spend up to $1000 per month on anything they want. Of course, the student is responsible to pay all of the spend credit back, by the end of the month. College cards, though they may not have a cash back, or bonus programme, are a good way of establishing credit (see last article), and building a good financial foundation. College cards may be offered by your bank, so check with them and their respective plans. However, if not, you can

Delta Sigma Theta Presents the Ignite Program

Danielle Procope
STAFF WRITER

This past Saturday, the Lambda Tau Chapter of Delta Sigma Theta sorority hosted the Ignite Program; a session where the objective is to encourage young women to actively pursue political office. It was founded and is currently run by Dr. Anne Moses who firmly believes that women’s increased presence in politics would lead to fundamental change in this country. Currently, women make up approximately 52% of the US population but only around 16% of federal level politicians. It is this reality that drives Dr. Moses to teach young women that political office is both accessible and necessary for women to gain if change is going to occur.

During the five hour session, participants learned the history of women’s political representation and why this group’s underrepresentation matters. Participants also learned to challenge their notions on what a woman’s role as a leader can be and to identify and overcome their fears about running for office. There were tutorials on how to raise funds for a campaign, how to file your papers, and meet voters. At the end, interested participants left with enough information to create a comprehensive 5-7 year plan to position them for a future candidacy. A highlight of the event was having guest speakers, Dr. Susan Eggman and Evelyn Tolbert, who are both local politicians and women of color. They spoke to the program participants in our minds. Likewise, Dr. Eggman said, “We live in a racist and sexist society, but that should not be a stumbling block for anyone.”

Chanel Murray, a political science major and current Vice President of Pacific’s Delta Sigma Theta chapter, says, “It is important to expose young college women to the skills they need to lead in their communities. This program helped to develop their interest and confidence in running for office. #### Pacific Upsets #18 UC Irvine in Overtime

Tigers Bounce Back From Disappointing Draw to Beat Conference Champs

The Pacific Women’s soccer team scored a tremendous upset on Sunday, taking out defending Big West Champion #1 UC Irvine in a 3-2 game won in overtime by senior Alex Topp.

The Tigers remain undefeated at home this season with a 5-0-1 record and bumped their overall record to 7-4-1. It was the program’s first win over a ranked opponent since Pacific defeated #22 Fresno State 2-1 September 12, 2006.

After an even first twenty minutes of play, the Tigers got the lead right back to the Anteater’s box. After a deflection off an Irvine defender, Schulze-Larsen’s pass found Hogan all alone on the right. Hogan didn’t waste her chance, shooting the ball past goalkeeper Jennifer Randazzo and tying the game in the 75th minute.

The Tigers almost gave the lead right back to the Anteaters a few minutes later. A through ball put Kopf into a one-on-one with sophomore goalkeeper Tashia Long. Long charged out and stopped the shot, keeping Pacific in the game.

Irvine would tie up the game fifteen minutes later. The Anteaters were awarded a penalty, which Coco Goodson converted, in the 95th minute.

It would be awhile before the next goal, a goal which put Pacific down for the first time in the game. Zuri Walker crossed the ball from the right side into the box. An unguarded Lexi Kopf headed the ball into the goal to make the score 2-1 in the 68th minute.

Only seven minutes later, freshman Pernille Schulze-Larsen carried the ball just inside the Anteater’s box. After a deflection off an Irvine defender, Schulze-Larsen’s pass found Hogan all alone on the right. Hogan didn’t waste her chance, shooting the ball past goalkeeper Jennifer Randazzo and tying the game in the 75th minute.

In the final seconds of regulation, Walker found herself in front of an open Pacific net. Her shot, which would have won the game for Irvine, was blocked on the line by freshman Malaya Cabrera. This sent the game into overtime.

On Friday, the Tigers squandered a 1-0 lead in the 83rd minute to Cal State Northridge, the first opposing team to score inside Stagg Memorial Stadium this season. Despite great chances through two overtimes, Pacific could not find the winning goal. The game finished 1-1.

The Tigers showed their refusal to let another lead go in regulation on Sunday. They also finally found the game-winning goal they were looking for.

In the 95th minute, junior Lauren Olvera’s throw-in eventually found its way to Topp in the box. Topp turned and fired a shot through a defender’s legs and past the keeper on the left side, giving Pacific the golden goal victory in overtime.

“I’m really proud of the way this team battled,” acknowledged Pacific Head Coach Keith Coleman. “Irvine is obviously a top-level team, so to get that 3-2 win makes us super proud of our team and ready for the rest of the Big West.”

Pacific will next head to UC Riverside on Sunday, October 9.
Pacific Wins in Thriller
Grindatti Nets Game-Winning Penalty

The Pacific Tigers Field Hockey team needed penalty strokes, but downed Robert Morris 3-2 Sunday, October 2, at Brookside Field. The winning stroke came from the stick of Maggie Grindatti in the sudden death round of penalty strokes.

The Tigers were first to strike when senior Amanda Spellman knocked in her third goal of the season giving Pacific a 1-0 advantage. On the goal, Spellman gained control and blocked a shot from Emily Trudeau and put the ball to the back left corner of the cage.

However, Robert Morris looked for a quick answer when a nice lead pass put Jamie Hartley one-on-one with goalkeeper Ashlee Schlesier. Schlesier attacked the approaching forward, and made an amazing diving save to leave the Tigers up 1-0.

The Tigers were not done scoring in the first half. A great individual effort from sophomore Melissa Maultsby gave Pacific a 2-0 lead. Maultsby intercepted a cross pass just outside of the circle, beat a defender, and put the ball through the keeper's pads. It was the third goal of the season for the forward giving the Tigers a 2-0 advantage.

After Ashlee Schlesier made thirteen saves in 90 minutes of play, the nation's seventh ranked goalie in saves per game was placed with the ball in her hands heading to penalty strokes.

After two penalty corners the Pacific offense ripped five consecutive shots, but were turned away by a battling Robert Morris defense.

After Ashlee Schlesier made thirteen saves in 90 minutes of play, the nation's seventh ranked goalie in saves per game was placed with the ball in her hands heading to penalty strokes.

The Tigers missed their first attempt after the keeper blocked Maggie Grindatti's shot, but after a miss from Robert Morris, sophomore Paige Counsman beat the Colonial's keeper giving Pacific a 1-0 advantage in penalty strokes. However, Robert Morris answered with two straight goals, putting Amanda Spellman in a must make situation. The senior ripped a shot that rattled the back of the cage tying strokes at 2-2. Robert Morris had one opportunity to close the contest, but Ashlee Schlesier stood strong making a great save to push the game to sudden-death penalty strokes.

The Colonials were the first to shoot, ripping a shot to the right of Schlesier. The keeper, who has been great all season for the Tigers, dove to the right extending her stick, and met the ball sending it wide of the cage. Schlesier said of the save, “sudden-death is about setting the tone, and I was able to do that with the first save. I followed the ball well and was able to get a stick on it.”

Head Coach Linda MacDonald was then forced with the decision of who to send for the potential game-winning score. After being turned away on two previous penalty strokes Maggie Grindatti, once again, had the chance to play hero. She lined up the shot, ripped it to the post she hit earlier in the game, but this time it caught the back of the cage, giving the Tigers a 3-2 victory. MacDonald never doubted Grindatti saying, “Maggie is a player that will come through for the team, and we knew she would finish it.”

Grindatti was confident after the two misses saying, “coach called on me, and I had to do this for the team and myself.” She added, “with the stroke being my third, the keeper knew where I was going, but I knew with my strength I could power it through and it led to the game-winner.”

The Tigers look to use the momentum of the thrilling win as they leave for three games in Virginia to take on Longwood, Richmond, and Virginia Commonwealth Oct. 6, 8, and 9, respectively.
