HEW Contract

University To Explore Unique Plan For Training Health Care Professionals

By Dick Enger,
Associate Director of Public Relations,
School of Dentistry

A project to determine the feasibility of training a variety of health professionals at a single school will be carried out by the University of the Pacific under a $347,701 contract awarded by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW).

The UOP study will explore how numerous types of health care professionals could be trained in a common interdisciplinary educational system. If the concept is found to be practical, implementation of such a program would be the first in the nation.

The 15-month study will be conducted by the university's School of Medical Sciences at the Pacific Medical Center in San Francisco, according to Dr. Peter L. Eichman, deputy director, Bureau of Health Manpower Education, who announced the award. The bureau is the major educational arm of HEW's National Institutes of Health.

"If registered nurses or other health professionals decide to become physicians or dentists today, they receive no credit for previous experience upon entering a school of medicine or dentistry," Dr. Eichman explained. "Health profession schools operate as independent units, each reluctant to grant credit for training received elsewhere. If we could train a variety of health professionals within a single institution, students could receive interdisciplinary credit for relevant experience or training," he said. "The basis of such a school would be a curriculum based on a core of common courses. This study will attempt to develop such a curriculum."

The program would provide an entirely new degree of career mobility among those interested in pursuing health care professions, or altering their career objectives, according to Dr. Dale F. Redig, dean of UOP's School of Dentistry. Dr. Redig will serve as project director and Dr. Bruce E. Spivey, dean of the university's School of Medical Sciences, will be associate project director of the study.

In addition to training in dentistry, Pacific offers degree programs in visual sciences and learning disabilities. Certificate programs in medical technology, inhalation therapy, cardio-pulmonary technology and orthopedic therapy are available at the Pacific Medical Center.

PRESIDENT STANLEY E. McCAFFREY signs the contract for a feasibility study Pacific will make for the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Looking on, left to right, are: Dr. Peter Eichman of HEW, Dr. Bruce Spivey, dean of UOP's School of Medical Sciences, and Dr. Dale Redig, dean of the School of Dentistry.

Under the HEW contract, Pacific will determine the resources needed to offer the degree programs in dentistry, medicine, podiatry and other health professions with a common educational system. It also will determine the effort required to expand the omnibus health professions curriculum to a degree or certificate program in nursing, dietetics, physical therapy, pharmacy and such auxiliary roles as physician and dental assistants.

"This study of the feasibility of new types of training for health professionals is extremely valuable to California and our nation," pointed out Stanley E. McCaffrey, president of the University. "New educational curricula and programs must be found to prepare individuals to administer health care in a wide variety of forms to all segments of our society. I am pleased that Pacific has the unique resources with the combination of our dental school, School of Medical Sciences and relationship with the Pacific Medical Center to conduct this important study supported by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. It is recognized that one of our nation's greatest needs in the '70s is meeting the needs of the rapidly expanding health care field. This project is in keeping with our conviction that the educational programs of UOP should be totally relevant to the needs of our world-wide community."

Notice to Alumni and Friends of Pacific

Private Universities all over the country are experiencing a serious drop in enrollment this year, and this is expected to get worse. Pacific has not been effected as much as most other institutions, but we are concerned and are increasing our efforts at student recruitment.

You can help with this problem very easily. Just send us the name and address of any high school student you know who plans to go to college. We will do the rest. Send it in a card or letter to the PACIFIC REVIEW, University of the Pacific, Stockton, California 95204.

One full tuition paying student is the equivalent of $50,000 in endowment. So you can see that your help in this way is just as important as your financial support of the University.

Law Student Receives National Award for No-Fault Article

Gerald Braunstein of Carmichael, a student at University of the Pacific's McGeorge School of Law in Sacramento, has won the top prize in a national essay contest for an article on no-fault automobile insurance.

"Conflict of Laws: Problems Arising From Different No-Fault Insurance Statutes in Various States" was the title of the essay that resulted in a $1,500 cash prize for Braunstein.

The awards competition was sponsored by Phi Delta Phi, a national legal fraternity.

Braunstein, a fourth year night student at McGeorge, works as an underwriter for Fireman's Fund American Insurance Companies in Sacramento. He is a 1963 graduate of Golden Gate College in San Francisco, which is his home town.

University College Established

The needs of a new group of students—former college students who dropped out, older people who want to earn a degree, and young students who don't fit into the traditional academic structure—have been recognized with the creation of a University College at UOP.

The University College is an administrative entity which will coordinate the individualized academic programs for these students and permit them to take courses in any or all of the liberal arts colleges and professional schools of the University and to tie them together in an academically respectable way which can lead to a bachelor's degree.

Dr. Alistair McCrone, UOP academic vice president, appointed Dr. Patrick Carlton coordinator of the project. Carlton will assume the position in addition to his duties as director of sponsored programs and research.

"If our universities are to remain viable institutions, they must be able to recognize changing trends in education and then develop programs to meet these trends," declared McCrone in explaining why Pacific is continuing its history of innovation with announcement of this project.

"We will be able to use the total resources of the university in a new way," McCrone added. "This college will enable students to build specialized degree programs by selecting courses from various colleges, departments, and professional schools within the university. Often the traditional structures and organizations of the university do not enable a student, particularly one returning for a refresher or advanced work, to build a course of study to meet his specific educational goals or objectives. Our University College program is designed to provide this flexibility."

UOP officials note that the term University College is not new, but the arrangement of such an academic program in the manner proposed at Pacific is uncommon among American universities.

The college will be guided by a governing committee of representatives from each liberal arts college and professional school on the Stockton campus.

The University College program may lead to an inter-college bachelor's degree, designed to provide students of all ages an opportunity to pursue combinations of existing courses across school and college lines, and with greater flexibility than in the past. Such packaging will be available only to those students unable to satisfy their needs through existing campus degree programs. Under this program, it will be possible for students to "package" course sequences or whole degrees from offerings currently available throughout the campus.

Thus, a student could choose courses from College of Pacific, Callison College, School of Engineering and Conservatory of Music to put together a "learning contract" of sufficient depth and scholarly respectability to qualify for the governing committee's approval. The University College degree would be awarded for work completed in this manner.

The college also will provide a framework for those who wish to pursue parttime studies without a commitment to a total degree program. As coordinator of University College, Carlton will serve as a point of reference and information for such persons and refer them to appropriate educational opportunities throughout UOP.

Drunk Drivers Attend Unusual Class

Drunk drivers go to school in an unusual class at University of the Pacific.

They come from all age groups, both sexes and diverse economic backgrounds to meet one night a week to discuss the problems of drinking and driving. They have been arrested for drunk driving and assigned to the class by a Stockton Municipal Court judge.

Dr. Helmut Riemer, assistant professor of counseling psychology in the UOP School of Education, conducts each three-hour session. "We stress that this is an educational approach to a major problem in our society," he explains. "Drinking and driving obviously is a larger problem than we can solve through this class, but it is a place to begin."

The entire program, believed the only one of its kind in California, is patterned after a similar project that has been successful for seven years in Phoenix, Arizona. The San Joaquin County Safety Council, Municipal Court in Stockton and the local Alcoholic Rehabilitation Clinic arranged the project here.

Riemer said his main goal in the classroom is "to create a concern in the students that this is a problem not only to society but to themselves. I tell them to be selfish, as it may save them a lot of heartache," added the UOP educator.

Reimer has specific goals for each meeting. They are (1) To achieve personal involvement in the course on the part of all the students, (2) To understand the physical effects of alcohol as these relate to driving performance, (3) To consider the "signs" of problem drinking and to analyze one's own drinking behavior, and (4) To give the opportunity to the students to make a personal commitment to a realistic solution.

The various municipal court judges assign the convicted drunk drivers to the class, and a portion of their fines support the program. Some of the offenders receive jail terms, because of past records and other factors, but they still can take the class at the jail from Leonard Glass, director of the local Alcoholic Rehabilitation Center. Those who satisfactorily complete the course in jail are considered for a possible modification of their sentence.

Foreign Study Expanded

The University of the Pacific has added to its courses of study in foreign nations a program at the Sophia University in Tokyo, Japan. The first group of seven students departed for Japan on August 30th.

Sophia, founded in 1913, is one of the leading universities in Japan and has an enrollment of more than 8,000 students. An international division emphasizes study of the Far East, and more than 25,000 students from throughout the world have enrolled in this program.

Cost of the year in Sophia is approximately the same as a year on the UOP campus in Stockton. The Sophia courses will also be transferable to avoid the students losing any credits by spending the year abroad.

Nine students from Elbert Covell College, the only Spanish-speaking college in North America, comprise the fourth group of students from the college to depart for a semester of study in Costa Rica.

Since the Covell students speak the language of the foreign country fluently, they are able to live with individual families. The group will reside in San Jose, Costa Rica's capital city.

The semester, beginning August 7 and ending in December, will be composed of six units of class time at the University of Costa Rica, six units of work experience with various firms, 3 units in seminar meetings and 1 to 3 units in special project work or independent research. Students will also have a meeting with the president of Costa Rica.

In a departure from previous years, Callison College sophomores will spend the 1972-73 academic year in Japan instead of India.

Dr. Reuben Smith, Callison College provost, announced that approximately 45 Callison students will attend the Kansai University School of Foreign Studies in southern Japan.

The students are the fifth class to spend a year abroad as part of the Callison program that emphasizes Asian studies. The previous four classes resided in Bangalore, India, but Smith explained that a current Indian government re-evaluation of all American programs has delayed scheduling the Bangalore project unit it was too late to go there this year. Smith stressed, however, that Pacific hopes to return to India next year, and the stay in Japan is within the Asian studies aim of the Callison curriculum.

While at Kansai, which is located between the ancient capitol of Kyoto and industrial city of Osaka, the Callison students will pursue courses to familiarize themselves with Japanese culture, language and history. There will be extensive independent study and community involvement work, plus the opportunity to study under Indian and Asian specialists in a variety of academic fields.

The Callison students will depart for Kansai in late September, after intensive study of the Japanese language, and the academic year will last through next April.

In addition to these programs the Institute of European Studies is continuing this semester with 45 students studying in various cities of Europe.

Faculty Publications

Three new books have been published by Pacific faculty members.

Side-Saddle on the Golden Calf, a book on social structure and popular culture in America is edited by Dr. George Lewis, assistant professor of sociology.

Goodyear Publishing Company, Inc. in Pacific Palisades released the 388-page book, a collection of essays which focus on both the existing social structure and proposed alternatives; the sources range from the humanities, social science and American studies to the popular and subcultural presses.

Minority Groups and Housing, a Bibliography 1950-1970 has just been released by General Learning Press. Authors of the book are Dr. Sidney Turoff, chairman of the department of business administration at UOP's College of the Pacific, and Dr. Byrl N. Boyce, of the university of Connecticut.

The book covers a variety of issues pertaining to minority groups and housing. Attention is focused on the increasing need for knowledge about the scope, nature and extent of problems relating to minority group housing in this country.

The God of Planet 607 by Dr. Edward Pohlman, professor of counseling psychology at the JOP School of Education, was released recently by The Westminster Press.

The 123-page book concerns how the strange religion and unusual sexual practices and taboos on a far-off planet involve the age-old arguments of good and evil and the existence of God.

The book has been described as of interest to college students, church discussion groups, seminarians, and others interested in the subtleties of social mores or in the great religious questions of Western traditions.

New Directors Named for Community Involvement and Callison Overseas Programs

Wilbert Smallwood of Davis has been named director of the Community Involvement Program (CIP) at Pacific.

CIP enables financially needy students from Stockton to receive a college education at UOP, and the program involves considerable tutorial assistance and counseling.

Smallwood replaces Yvonne Allen, who resigned to pursue graduate work in Chicago.

The new director is a native of Washington, D.C. who spent approximately 11 years in the Air Force. He resided in Stockton from 1964 to 1969, when he moved to Davis to study at the University of California there. He recently received a B.A. degree from UCD in the field of legal psychology of Black Americans.

Smallwood, 37, attended Delta College while living in Stockton and was active in numerous Black oriented organizations, including CORE, NAACP, Stockton Black Caucus, Black Student Union and Neighborhood Improvement Association. He helped develop the original proposal for the Anti-Poverty Program in San Joaquin County and was active on Stockton Unified School District committees.

At UCD, where Smallwood was named to the Dean's Honor List, he served as President of the Black Student Union, and Black student representative on the Educational Opportunity Program and Chancellor's Task Force for Black Programs.

Horace Dutton of Wooster, Ohio has been named director of overseas programs at Callison College.

Dutton, who has resided abroad in Japan, Hong Kong, Mexico, Australia and Turkey, will direct the 1972-73 Callison program at the Kansai University School of Foreign Studies in Japan.

Dutton replaces Dr. Chester Williams, who resigned to assume another position.

The new director is a native of Santiago, Chile who later became a U.S. citizen. He holds a B.A. degree from College of Wooster and B.D. degree from the Graduate School of Theology in Oberlin, Ohio.

Dutton comes to Pacific after nine years with Pepsi-Cola, where he started as a marketing director in Mexico and advanced to manager of the regional plant in Australia, director of marketing for the Far East Area Office in Hong Kong and Far East Vice President for Pepsi-Cola Ltd. in Japan.

Before joining Pepsi-Cola he spent 10 years in Rochester, New York, where he was director of international sales promotion for Eastman Kodak Company, and two years with the United States Information Service in Turkey.

Law Students Serve as Welfare Hearing Officers

A revolutionary concept in American legal education was on trial last summer in a program expected to considerably reduce state expenditures for welfare.

In an effort to roll back a staggering backlog of 30,000 welfare appeal cases, the State Department of Social Welfare contracted with University of the Pacific's McGeorge School of Law in Sacramento to employ 60 advanced law students as welfare fair hearing officers.

The fair hearing officer is employed in a quasi-judicial capacity by the state as an impartial referee who allows both the claimant and county welfare department to present arguments concerning decisions adversely affecting the claimant. After hearing the case in a court-like setting, the hearing officer writes a "proposed decision" that later must be approved by the director of the State Department of Social Welfare.

The appeal backlog relates to a court decision requiring a hearing for a welfare recipient before his assistance benefits are terminated. Resulting appeals have been so great in number that some delays have stretched to 18 months instead of the prescribed 60 days.

While the use of hearing officers is not new, the use of law students in the program is experimental and without precedent.

Robert Best, chief referee for the welfare department, said, "We originally set up the program for the simplest type of hearings, but the students have progressed so rapidly that some are now receiving more complicated hearings and doing a fine job with them." The case include Aid to the Totally Disabled, Aid to the Blind, Old Age Assistance and Aid to Families with Dependent Children. The 60 students received a three-week training course at the start of the program.

The project has been successful on three fronts—for the claimant, the state, and the law students.

For the claimants, fair hearings that should have been heard months earlier are now being handled.

For the state, the backlog of cases was reduced by more than 9,000 appeals this summer. Best said the program—which involves a $456,000 contract—"certainly will pay for itself by allowing the state to reduce the some $6 million spent annually for aid paid pending a hearing. This money would not be expended if the hearings were completed." Welfare payments for many recipients continue until the hearing procedure is complete, the officials note a reduction in the appeal time saves California taxpayers in the long run.

For legal education, the program has proved feasible and shown that this type of program can enhance both the administrative appeal process of the state and educational process in the law school.

Gordon Schaber, dean of McGeorge and retired presiding judge of the Superior Court of Sacramento, calls the program "the most exciting innovation in legal education in the last 20 years. In addition to giving our students clinical experience," he explained, "it gives our students the unique opportunity to participate in our legal system from the judicial viewpoint and see the difference between effective and ineffective case presentation."

Best voiced a similar feeling in terming the project "a tremendous benefit to both sides. It is a unique educational experience for the students and a tremendous benefit to the state by reducing the case backlog."

Representatives from the legal profession who have seen the program now are beginning to explore the possibility of using this prototype in other areas of administrative law and in other states.

Welfare, No-Fault Discussed in Pacific Law Journal

Articles on the justice court system, welfare reform, no-fault insurance and annexation procedures highlight the current issue of Pacific Law Journal.

The journal is published twice a year by University of the Pacific McGeorge School of Law students in Sacramento as an analysis of significant California legislation. The winter issue each year includes a review of major legislation enacted by the previous session of the California Legislature.

The journal is available on a subscription basis for $7 per year from Pacific Law Journal, University of the Pacific, McGeorge School of Law, 3201 Donner Way, Sacramento, CA 95817. Individual copies are $4.50 each. Editor-in-Chief of the current issue is Charles Sanders.

The current issue includes an article on justice court judges by Miss Mary Hennessy, senior attorney with the administrative office of the courts; a report on the 1971 Welfare Reform Act by State Senator Anthony Beilenson (D-Los Angeles) and Larry Agran, legal counsel for the California Senate Health and Welfare Committee which Beilenson heads; an article on no-fault automobile insurance by Walter Bank, legislative counsel to the Fireman's Fund American Insurance Companies, and an item on the problems of annexation laws by William Holliman Jr., assistant legal counsel and legislative advocate for the League of California Cities.

Other sections of the journal include articles by McGeorge students on a variety of topics including illegal transportation of marijuana, drug rehabilitation, consumer legislation on door to door selling, eminent domain proceedings, and inheritance rights of nonresident aliens.

Pharmacy Students Learn Health Care Firsthand

By RICHARD DOTY,
News Bureau Director

Robert Christian makes all the rounds at the hospital, learning about the clinical laboratory, internal medicine, pediatrics, surgery, pathology, and intensive care unit.

During a semester of full time study at the hospital, he also is required to prepare numerous reports on the diverse operations that involve hospital administration and to attend many seminars and meetings with nurses, doctors and medical officials.

But Robert Christian is not studying to become a doctor or hospital administrator, he is a student at Pacific's School of Pharmacy, where a new breed of pharmacist is being educated to meet the demands of a rapidly changing health care field.

"Students in this program gain a first-hand understanding of the patient in the diseased state," explained Dr. James King, director of the clinical pharmacy program at UOP. "They have an opportunity to observe the action of drugs as they are used in treating diseased states; until this program was developed student knowledge in this field was frequently abstract."

King, who refers to the hospital training as "clinical pharmacy" or "patient oriented pharmacy," said the program started in 1968. Students attended teaching sessions at San Joaquin General Hospital under the guidance of Dr. J. David Bernard, director of medical education.

The UOP program has since expanded to a full semester at that hospital and Dominican Hospital in Santa Cruz, and, starting this semester, at Letterman General Hospital in San Francisco. The staff of the hospital serves as part of the faculty.

"We have three main objectives in our clinical pharmacy operation," King explained. "They are (1) to permit the pharmacist to identify his responsibility in health care delivery and develop his communicative skills by providing him with direct contact with medical and paramedical professionals and patients, (2) to train the pharmacist regarding the problems inherent in the prescription and administration of drugs to patients with simple and complex pathologies, and (3) to fully develop the pharmacist's ability to serve as an information resource to the medical and paramedical professions and public for the most effective utilization of therapeutic agents."

Because the instruction is virtually on a one-to-one basis, the number of student participants has been kept small. Twenty students have completed the course so far in Santa Cruz and Stockton.

But the popularity of the program has resulted in an expected total of 50 students in 1972-73, which will be the second year for the full time program at the Stockton hospital and third year at Dominican in Santa Cruz. Christian, who is from Santa Barbara, recently completed a semester at San Joaquin General Hospital.

King voiced enthusiasm over this approach to training pharmacy students. "This gives the student more of an understanding of the physician's reasons for prescribing medication," he declared, "and we want our students to carry this knowledge of the total health care system to the community level."

This concern with our country's health care system also is of major importance to Dr. Ivan Rowland, dean of the pharmacy school. He feels that health care for Americans will be increasing importance in the coming years, and emergence of a total health care delivery system in the U.S. will depend heavily upon an increased responsibility for the pharmacist—through training in programs like the UOP clinical pharmacy operation.

"If we are going to meet the challenges of the future," declared Rowland, "what better method is there to learn about other professionals in the health care field than to actually make the rounds with doctors, nurses, medical specialists, and everyone also who delivers health care."

KIDNEY DIALYSIS treatment at San Joaquin General Hospital is explained by Dr. George Herron, director of the San Joaquin Artificial Kidney Institute, to Robert Christian, pharmacy student who recently completed a semester of study at the hospital. Research Grants

Several research grants have recently been given to UOP professors and scientists.

Dr. Paul Gross, chemistry professor at university of the Pacific has received a two-year grant of $10,500 from Research Corporation of New York, a foundation for the advancement of science.

Gross, a UOP faculty member since 1967, will use the grant for research study pertaining to the preparation of sugar derivatives which are of importance in the synthesis of biologically active compounds.

A $43,300 two-year research grant from the National Science Foundation has been awarded to Dr. Steven Obrebski, a research associate at the university's Pacific Marine Station at Dillion Beach.

The Purpose of the study will be to determine the effects of certain parasites on the population of two small but abundant species of clams. The project involves sampling from field populations and computer simulations of the interacting parasite-host populations to develop quantitative models of these systems. Involved is the development of an ecological theory of the evolution of complex parasitic life histories.

Dr. Edward Pohlman, professor of counseling psychology at the UOP School of education, has received a three year grant of approximately $140,000 from the federal government for a study on the psychological effects of vasectomies.

The grant, which involves $34,589 in direct costs for the first year, will allow Pohlman to research how a voluntary vasectomy, or male sterilization has affected a sample of approximately 800 people in California. Pohlman's wife, Julia, will be a research associate on the project.
