Pacific Receives Largest Class

From throughout California, from every state in the union and from 48 foreign countries they come each fall to begin their new life as students at the University of the Pacific.

The 1974-75 academic year opened with the largest entering class on the Stockton campus in the history of the university: 820 freshmen and 455 transfer students. That's just 500 students less than the entire student body in 1960. The next largest entering class was in 1969. The freshman class is seven per cent larger than a year ago. There probably could have been even more transfer students this year, but the School of Pharmacy is filled to capacity.

The entering class is also among the best academically with a combined grade point average of 3.25, or slightly higher than a "B". Four students received highly prestigious National Merit Scholarships.

In commenting on the new students this fall, President Stanley

E. McCaffrey stated, "We are indeed gratified and pleased that we have been able to increase our enrollment without any sacrifice in academic standards. At a time when many institutions are experiencing serious declines in enrollment, it is particularly significant that the situation is reversed at Pacific."

Residence halls are filled to capacity and, in some instances, even overcrowded. Several students are being housed in fraternities and sororities on a temporary basis and even with the increase of space for more than 120 new students in the new University Center, finding housing space for students desiring to live on campus has become a serious problem.

"... students are looking for a private and personal situation ..."

There are several reasons for the increased enrollments, and not the least of which has been a campus-wide involvement in the admissions process. It has even extended beyond the campus to include involvement of alumni and other friends of the university. As pointed out by E. Leslie Medford, Dean of Admissions, "There is a campus-wide admissions consciousness with participation by all segments of the university including students, faculty and administration."

Another factor in the increase, according to Medford, is that students are looking for a private and personal situation. Many have gone through public schools, then looked at public higher educational institutions and didn't like what they saw. At UOP they can retain personality, become involved, and can see greater educational opportunities.

This factor is supported by a number of comments from incoming students interviewed during the registration and orientation program prior to the start of the term.

A freshman from Hollister, for example, heard about Pacific from her band teacher who is an alumnus. Asked what she thinks now that she is on campus, she replied, "beautiful, fantastic."

A sophomore transfer student from the University of Connecticut researched colleges throughout the United States and selected Pacific because, "at Pacific you get to know teachers, work out schedules and there is endless opportunity."

A freshman from Miami said his parents are really impressed with Pacific: "They went to Brown University, which is an Ivy League school, and Pacific reminds them of Brown. They think it is very beautiful." He heard about Pacific from a neighbor and from a counselor in high school and chose UOP because he was interested in a small private school.

The father of a junior transfer student said simply, "I am jealous."

He and his wife feel that UOP is not a "great machine but a place where there is personal contact." Their daughter is in the music therapy program in the Conservatory of Music. Pacific has one of the few accredited music therapy programs on the West Coast.

Finally, a mother from the East Coast commented, "Pacific is following the ideals that I believe in. The 'whole person' is the most important thing. Here you are not lost in a factory. Pacific is headed in the right direction."

One of the major problems facing parents and students alike are the spiralling costs. In what might be termed an understatement, the father of an incoming freshman commented, "It is a little worrisome."

The mother of another new student said the costs are high, but her daughter feels UOP is great and the smallness is nice. A father commented, "I live for my children, and the children's education is important. UOP has a first-rate education, and the only problem is the high cost." He has one student at Stanford and another entering college in two years. Consequently, his daughter has to get a job to stay in school.

Medford also commented on the high cost of attending Pacific, pointing out that Pacific offers a very extensive financial aids program which this year consists of nearly $6 million. Approximately one half of the students receive some form of aid either through scholarships, loans, grants or work-study programs. A placement office on campus also assists students in finding part-time work.

Some 900 students are attending Pacific this fall on a state scholarship—an increase of nearly 200 from last year and nearly double the number of two years ago. The expansion of the state scholarship program has made funds available to more qualified students, giving them the opportunity to select a private college or university. State scholarship grants are based on need and range up to $2,000 a year.

The record number of students will witness a number of changes on the campus during the year. The $3 million University Center is nearing completion, a new recreation area located on the site of the old swimming pool is completed, and the move into several newly acquired buildings on the old Delta College campus will begin during the year.

COP Dean Appointed Acting Vice President

Dr. Clifford J. Hand, a faculty member and administrator at Pacific for the past 17 years, has been named Acting Academic Vice President of the university.

Dr. Stanley E. McCaffrey, UOP president, announced that Hand has been selected to serve in the position that has been vacant since Dr. Alistair W. McCrone resigned in June to become president of Humboldt State University.

McCaffrey said, "The university is indeed fortunate that we have a person so experienced and well qualified as Clifford Hand to serve in this vitally important responsibility. I know of no one who is more devoted to the university or more knowledgeable of university academic matters than he, and I am most enthusiastic about his appointment."

Hand has served as dean of College of Pacific, the main liberal arts college at the university, since 1972. His previous academic experience at UOP includes three years (1969-72) as associate dean at COP, five years (1964-69) as a faculty member at Pacific's Raymond College, and seven years (1957-64) on the English Department faculty at COP. He helped implement key segments of the major COP curriculum revision in 1969-70.

The educator has been selected for Fulbright awards three times, once as a student and twice for overseas teaching in France and Morocco. He also has conducted four NDEA summer English institutes and taught at Cornell College, Valparaiso University and University of Illinois.

Hand, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, holds a B.A. degree from Cornell College in Iowa, M.A. degree from Harvard and Ph.D. degree from University of Chicago. His academic areas of interest encompass English and the humanities, and he has served as a consultant to the advisory committee on the teaching of English for the California State Board of Education.

UOP Scientist Rejects Oyster Spawning Theory

A belief that the spawning behavior of oysters is related to definite phases of the moon has been rejected in a research project completed at the Pacific Marine Station at Dillon Beach.

Dr. Victor L. Loosanoff, adjunct professor of marine biology and mariculture at the UOP facility, reported recently that his study of a 20-year period showed "no possibility of a significant relationship" between spawning time and lunar phases.

Loosanoff compiled most of the data for the project in Long Island Sound between 1937 and 1956 and completed the research at the UOP station with the assistance of a $9,000 National Science Foundation grant.

Loosanoff, whose interest in mariculture, or sea farming, spans nearly 50 years, said claims of oyster spawning being related to lunar phases have been raised over the years. "This has been mostly in Europe but it has been largely superficial evidence that I challenged because it has been based on very few samples, taken at irregular intervals and not significant statistically."

The marine scientist's findings leave little hope of the relationship in question. He said his study shows "there is no relationship between the chief events of the annual propagation of oysters and the moon phases during this season."

Loosanoff has been on the Pacific Marine Station staff since 1963. He is a worldwide expert in marine science who has published more than 300 papers and spent 31 years as director of the U.S. Marine Biological Laboratory in Connecticut.

Names in the News

Dr. Paul Bach-y-Rita, professor in the Department of Visual Sciences at Pacific's School of Medical Sciences in San Francisco, has been awarded the 1974 Franceschetti-Liebrecht Prize of the German Ophthalmological Society for his book detailing a substitute sight system for the blind that transmits pictorial images via the skin. Bach-y-Rita is also associate director of the Smith-Kettlewell Institute of Visual Sciences.

William H. Barr, assistant director of student activities at Michigan State University, has been named associate dean of students. Barr, 37, has been in various positions involving student life at Michigan State for 10 years. His duties have included graduate resident advisor, director of eight residence halls and, since 1970, assistant director of student activities. This new position, created after the resignation of Dean of Men Richard K. Williams, will involve general administrative responsibilities in the areas of counseling, advising and student orientation, plus direct responsibility for the campus residential life program.

Dr. Marvin H. Malone, professor of physiology and pharmacology at Pacific's School of Pharmacy, has been named editor of the "American Journal of Pharmaceutical Education." Malone, a UOP faculty member since 1969, has been active for several years in numerous editorial capacities in addition to his teaching and research work.

Robert B. Supernaw has been named field coordinator for pharmacy continuing education and instructor in health care administration at Pacific's School of Pharmacy. Supernaw graduated from the School of Pharmacy in 1972 with a Doctor of Pharmacy degree.

Dr. Sidney Turoff, chairman of the Department of Business Administration at Pacific, recently received three nationwide honors. Turoff has been selected as an outstanding educator for 1974 by the Outstanding Educators of America organization, has been appointed to the editorial review board of the journal published by the American Real Estate and Urban Economics Association, and has been reappointed to the national manuscript review board of the Society of Real Estate Appraisers Foundation. Turoff has been a faculty member since 1971.

Stanley W. Croker, assistant professor of social sciences at Callison College, has been named preceptor. Croker, a UOP faculty member since 1970, will assist Callison Provost Otis H. Shao with a variety of administrative assignments at the liberal arts cluster college.

Cynthia A. Palmer

Cynthia A. Palmer, a 1974 graduate of Pacific, has been named development assistant at UOP. She will work on the alumni-parents annual fund programs, with special emphasis on the telephone and direct mail campaigns.

Shao has served as dean of the UOP Graduate School since coming to Pacific in 1968 from Florida Presbyterian College, where he was a political science professor. Shao, whose duties at Pacific include professor of international politics, is a member of numerous educational organizations and an Asian scholar. Callison, a liberal arts cluster college, features Asian studies and has overseas programs in India and Japan.

Smith came to Pacific as Callison provost in 1972 from the University of Chicago, where he served in teaching and administrative positions for nine years. Included among his duties there were dean of students for the graduate social sciences division.

Dr. R. Eugene Rice, associate professor of social science at Pacific's Raymond College, has accepted a one-year appointment with the Danforth Foundation in St. Louis, Missouri. Rice, a faculty member since 1964, will spend the year as a program executive and faculty consultant and be involved in a major reassessment of the foundation's programs in higher education and urban affairs.

Mrs. Grace Hill Buck, a member of the registrar's staff for 15 years, died on May 23, 1974. Campus friends have established The Grace Buck Memorial Book Fund at Pacific's Irving Martin Library in her memory.

Dr. Dewey W. Chambers, professor of education at Pacific and a recognized authority in children's literature, has edited the booklet, "Folk and other Tales from the Mother Lode." The 10 folk tales on the historic Mother Lode were selected as the best of many collected by students in a January winter term class. The students visited with old-timers throughout the Mother Lode to transcribe tales previously passed on from generation to generation by word of mouth.

Richard H. Reynolds, professor in UOP's Art Department, has been selected as an outstanding educator for 1974 by the Outstanding Educators of America organization. Reynolds has been a UOP faculty member since 1939.

Stanley B. Kobsef

Stanley B. Kobsef of Sacramento has been named director of annual fund programs at Pacific. Kobsef, who directed a recent $2 million capital fund drive at the California College of Arts and Crafts in Oakland, will have the responsibility for coordinating and directing the university's annual fund programs among alumni, parents, friends and other constituents. Kobsef has 11 years experience in fund raising.

David S. Goedecke has been named executive assistant to the Conservatory dean. He was assistant professor of music education and director of the university band. Goedecke, a UOP faculty member since 1968, will continue his duties directing Pacific Music Camp, Pacific Music Clinic, marching band, jazz band and varsity band.

Administrative Changes Announced at Pacific

The reassignment of two administrators at University of the Pacific has been announced by Dr. Stanley E. McCaffrey, UOP president.

Dr. Otis H. Shao, formerly dean of the Graduate School, has been named provost of Callison College. Dr. Reuben W. Smith III, formerly provost of Callison, has been named dean of the Graduate School.

In announcing the new appointments, McCaffrey said the "excellent experience" of both men is especially appropriate for their new positions. "The move is in line with the university's continuing efforts to improve and strengthen the academic and administrative programs of the university," McCaffrey said.

Briefly Noted

Dr. Stephen K. Bailey

Dr. Stephen K. Bailey, vice president of the American Council on Education, was the keynote speaker at the first President's All-University Conference held on September 14. Bailey addressed the faculty, administrators and student and alumni leaders on the subject, "The Future of American Higher Education."

Bailey has served as a professor and administrator at Syracuse University, was a founding member of the National Academy of Education, and served six years as a member of the New York State Board of Regents.

The conference was held to give the total UOP community the opportunity to meet together at the start of the school year and consider matters of importance to the university.

A collection of Western American literature has been presented to the Pacific Center for Western Historical Studies by Dr. Joseph J. Shebl, a Salinas physician with a life-long interest in history. Included in the periodical collection is more than 1,200 volumes in deluxe library bindings. Among the major history journals in the collection are the "Missouri Historical Society Review," "Pacific Northwest Quarterly," "Magazine of Western History," and "Panhandle Plains Historical Review." "Almost all of the early volumes are out of print and some are extremely rare," explained Dr. R. Coke Wood, director of the center.

Pacific has received an approximate $8,000 grant to allow criminal justice workers to enroll in college classes. The funds, awarded by the U.S. Department of Justice and California Office of Criminal Justice Planning as part of the Federal Law Enforcement Program, will allow approximately 20 criminal justice personnel—such as police officers, probation officials and correctional workers—to take one course at UOP in a field related to their work.

A joint project involving Stockton State Hospital and University of the Pacific has received a $79,000 federal grant to assist the mentally disordered in adjusting to society after hospital confinement.

The funds, the first portion of a three-year project that may reach $250,000, were awarded to the hospital by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. About 30 students from the university's Psychology Department will be used to help provide a transitional experience for the patients from hospital life to community living. The project is an outgrowth of a UOP-Stockton State Hospital program started in 1972.

The Earl Warren Memorial Scholarship has been established at Pacific in memory of the late jurist. Warren, former California governor and chief justice of the U.S. Supreme Court for 16 years, was a friend of Pacific for nearly 50 years. He was a close personal friend of President Stanley E. McCaffrey and former Pacific presidents Tully C. Knoles and Robert E. Burns. He had received the honorary Doctor of Laws degree from UOP. The scholarship, amounting to $1,000 annually, will be awarded to an outstanding and deserving student who has an interest in law, government or some area of public service.

The High School Equivalency Program (HEP) at Pacific has been rated the best in the country in its category for the second year in a row. Angel Perea, director of the program, said recent federal Department of Labor statistics show UOP leads seven other similar programs that are located in California, Washington, Wisconsin, Colorado, Florida and South Carolina. HEP allows children of migrant and seasonal farm workers to complete their high school education. The ratings cover the 1973-74 school year, when Pacific was first in number of graduates at 77 and had the fewest dropouts at 7.

Tigers' Talented Tailback Looks Ahead with Insight

by
TONY SAURO
Sports Information Director

Willard Harrell, UOP's sensational senior running back, is thinking a lot more these days. But, the Tigers' opponents are enjoying it a lot less.

Which is not to inter Harrell hasn't been thinking in the past. It's just that, with blazing speed (4.4 in the 40) and elusive moves at his command, the 5-10, 182-pound tailback has not been allowing his talents to do most of the talking.

Now, with Dick Bass' school records, All-America stardom and a possible pro career looming large in his future, Harrell has become a wiser, more mature runner.

"I'm doing things a little differently now," Harrell grins knowingly. "I'm thinking a lot more. I'm not just running crazy like I used to."

Well, Willard is still running a little crazy.

Fresno State, Los Angeles State and the rest of UOP's 1973 opponents will attest to that. Harrell amassed 1,319 rushing yards last season, including outbursts of 240 against L.A. and 231 against Fresno. He ranked sixth nationally in rushing, fourth in scoring (92 points) and led the country in all-purpose running with an average of 177.7 yards a game.

He needs 700 yards this season to erase Bass' long-standing career mark of 2,715. If he gains 984 yards, Willard will become only the 17th player in NCAA history to gain 3,000 yards in a career.

But, Harrell the Thinker isn't terribly concerned about all that.

"It's nice to be recognized and I guess it'll help me as far as pursuing a pro career goes," Willard says. "If the records come, fine. But, the biggest thing is to stay healthy and have a good season."

That's where the thinking comes in again.

"I'm running with more control now and I'm more relaxed," says Harrell, who has been bothered by nagging foot and leg injuries during most of his UOP career. "I'm doing things differently now. Like, I try to wait until I get right up on a defensive man before I make my move. That way, he doesn't really tackle me, he grabs at me. He's got to respect my speed so he can't come right out and get a good stick on me."

Harrell has been avoiding those "good sticks" admirably of late. He's averaged 5.9 yards a carry during his two-year Tiger career and has returned kickoffs an average of 30.8 yards.

Harrell's thinking has also paid off in other ways. "I play with a lot more confidence now," he says. "I'm relaxed and I don't run the first three plays of a game hard and then be dead tired. I feel like I'm being more consistent now and my goal is to have a good game every week."

Harrell, who admits that his computer-taxing running statistics

Willard Harrell (center), UOP's talented senior running back, totaled up 1,319 rushing yards last season, ranking sixth nationally in rushing.

don't interest him that much, does want to gain "at least 100 yards a game this year. That's a lot of yards," Harrell sighs. "People are always expecting me to gain 160... 180... 200 yards every game. That's hard. Getting 100 yards is fine with me."

So is chasing a legend (Dick Bass), even though Harrell didn't realize until recently the legend was there to pursue. "I lived in Stockton all my life," Harrell grins. "And, I didn't even know Pacific was here. I had heard of Bass, but I didn't know he'd gone to school here. I didn't see my first UOP game until the ninth grade (1970)."

He decided to attend UOP despite the determined recruiting efforts of a host of other schools because "I wanted to play and I knew I'd get the chance here." He hasn't regretted the decision. "We got great coaches here and we're starting to get better players and more of the good players from around here. I think we're going to have a great season."

Harrell will play a giant's role in any would-be UOP success this year.

So will the woman behind the man, Willard's wife Daphne. "She's in my corner and she's always encouraging me," Willard says. "After I fumbled and we lost the San Diego State game last year, I felt terrible. But, she told me if I hadn't gained all the yards I did we wouldn't have had the chance to win."

"She keeps track of all my statistics and worries more about that than I do. She even sent letters and my picture to all of the pro teams this summer for me."

Willard's wife appears to be an excellent scout. But, the pros haven't overlooked Harrell. Some of the NFL bird-dogs rate him as one of the four or five best senior backs in America and it's almost a certainty he'll be a high draft pick next winter.

Then, his thinking will really have paid off.

Professor Discusses Cuban Situation

The 13-year break in relations between the United States and Cuba will probably end in "a matter of months," and a main reason will be the recent change in the American presidency.

This is the view of Dr. Rufo Lopez-Fresquet, an economics professor at Pacific's Spanish-speaking Elbert Covell College.

Lopez-Fresquet, minister of the treasury in Cuba when Castro came to power in 1959, commented on the Cuban situation that was recently discussed by President Ford in a news conference. Ford said the U.S. would act in accord with the Latin American nations in moving to improve relations with Cuba, which were suspended in 1961.

"I think it is only a matter of months, maybe four to six, before we reestablish relations with Cuba," observed the UOP faculty member. He speculated that because Cuba has been invited—for the first time since 1964—to a meeting next spring of the Organization of American States (OAS), the U.S. would be in an awkward position by attending without recognizing Cuba.

"In effect, President Ford was urging the OAS membership to take the first step in recognizing the Castro government," he explained. "If the U.S. takes the first step we will lose face with the Latin Americans because we are the ones that urged these countries to break their relations with Castro."

Lopez-Fresquet, a Covell faculty member since 1970, also feels the Nixon-Ford change will speed up attempts to improve relations between the two countries. "Nixon and Castro have had an awful personal relationship; they hate each other to the point that when Nixon is mentioned in the Cuban press the 'x' in his name is spelled with a swastika." Lopez-Fresquet, along with other observers of Cuba, also feels the influence upon Nixon of the Cuban community in the Florida area also hindered the former president in attempts to improve relations with the Castro regime.

Lopez-Fresquet, who spent 40 years in Cuba before fleeing the country after his break with Castro, voiced criticism of the U.S. policy of isolationism for Cuba. "This policy has worked in an economic sense in that it has made conditions worse for the Cuban people. But it is morally and politically wrong because the Cuban people, not Castro, are the victims. As long as this continues, Castro can continue to blame the United States for his economic woes," he concluded.

Callison Students Study in Japan

Approximately 40 University of the Pacific students have departed for an academic year of study in Japan. Most of the participants are sophomores from Callison College.

Upon arrival the students will take a six-week orientation class to increase their understanding of the language and culture of Japan. This will be at the Kyoto Foreign Language School. The students will then divide into three groups, one to pursue academic studies, a second to pursue cultural interests such as Japanese art forms, crafts, farming and social rituals, and a third to participate in a work-study program involving Japanese businesses. Students in all three areas are required to live with a Japanese family.

At the end of the academic year next spring, all the students will attend seminar type classes at Sophia University in Tokyo before returning to the U.S.

The students are the seventh class to spend a year abroad as part of the program at Callison. The UOP cluster college operates the largest U.S. student program in Japan and is also the only U.S. college to structure the overseas experience in academic, cultural and work-study areas.

Callison College will also sponsor a month-long visit to Taiwan in January. Scheduled as part of the January winter term, the trip will be from December 27, 1974, through January 31, 1975.

"Students participating in this program will experience a total immersion in Chinese culture and language," explained Dr. Otis H. Shao, Callison provost. He said two four-unit projects will be offered. A Chinese Culture Program will feature independent study in Chinese theatre, Chinese art, Chinese instrumental music and Kungfu and be directed by H. N. Yao, professor of comparative literature and philosophy at Callison. A Chinese Language Program for beginning and advanced students will be directed by Marie Shao, assistant professor of Chinese culture at Callison and wife of the provost. The trip will include visits to major points of interest on Taiwan, several field trips and living experiences in Taiwan.

Cost of the trip, including round trip air fare, room and board and local travels, is $1,050 for full-time UOP students. Non-UOP students making the trip will be charged tuition for four UOP credits. The program is limited to 40 students, and persons interested should contact the Callison College at (209) 946-2441.

Alumni to Participate In Various Projects

A wide ranging program of alumni involvement in various University of Pacific programs was unveiled at the second annual President's Alumni Leadership Conference held September 7.

In announcing the program President Stanley E. McCaffrey stated that all that has been accomplished in the 50 years since Pacific moved to the Stockton campus has been the result of a team effort. In that 50 years the size of the annual budget has grown from $187,000 annually to some $24 million this year and the capital value from no facilities to a physical plant valued at more than $50 million.

McCaffrey called upon alumni to become even more involved in the future to assure the continued growth and development of the university.

The project announced at the conference, titled the "Pacific Greater Awareness Program," is an outgrowth of recommendations made by alumni at the leadership conference a year ago. In the new program alumni are being asked to become "ambassadors" for the university, assisting in a wide range of activities including student recruiting, news media contacts, fund raising, and publicizing university events held in the alumnus' area and on campus.

Coordinator of the program will be Diana Lee Clouse, director of alumni and parent relations.

Miss Clouse stated that often alumni feel that the only way they can contribute to the university is financially when in fact they can be of invaluable assistance in many areas.

The "Greater Awareness Program" will match alumni interest with the various opportunities for involvement. Initially this includes 10 specific areas: Student recruiting, staging regional meetings, conducting and assisting in telephone campaigns to fellow alumni, visiting high school counselors to inform them of Pacific programs, hosting receptions for prospective students, serving as representatives of a specific class of graduates, participating in raising funds for scholarships, contacting local news media for greater coverage of Pacific news, and developing alumni chapters in local areas.

All persons attending the conference signed up to participate in one or more of the programs. Persons interested in participating in this program and in being of greater assistance to the University of the Pacific should complete the following form and return it to the Office of Alumni-Parent Relations, University of the Pacific, Stockton, California 95211.

Regents Launch Program To Assist Students

A committee of 10 Regents, under the leadership of Chairman Edward W. Westgate, has successfully launched a program for the university which is designed to produce significant scholarship assistance for qualified students.

The program, Patrons of Pacific, was started during the summer and provides a unique opportunity for friends, alumni and other benefactors of Pacific to underwrite scholarship awards for promising and deserving young men and women.

For each $1,000 contributed and designated for the Patrons program, a scholarship will be named for either the patron providing the funds or named for someone else as preferred by the patron. By the end of August, the program had generated 23 scholarships.

"The committee and I," stated Westgate, "personally are extremely pleased with this early response. The $23,000 received to date is certainly encouraging as we set our sights on a goal of $100,000 through the Patrons of Pacific."

During the course of the year, there will be opportunities for the patron and the scholarship recipient to get to know each other in a personal way. The Patrons' scholars will be selected through the normal procedures established in the Office of Financial Aids under the directorship of Donald G. Smiley.

"The exciting response to the Patrons program thus far," said President Stanley E. McCaffrey, "demonstrates in a most dramatic manner the concern which the Board of Regents has for our students. Westgate is to be commended for his foresight in recommending the program and, more importantly, for his willingness to assume a leadership role to make certain it is successful."

Westgate is a Stanford graduate who attended Pacific as a member of the Class of '33 and has served on the Board of Regents of the university since 1967. He is president of the Westgate Development Company and resides in Pleasant Hill.

The remaining members of the Patrons Committee are: Ted F. Baun, '27, of Fresno; Maurice Buerge, Los Angeles; Robert D. Haas, San Francisco; C. Vernon Hansen, Sacramento; Cecil W. Humphreys, '27, Atherton; Richard G. Landis, San Francisco; Mrs. Ben C. Wallace, Jr., Stockton; George H. Wilson, Clarksburg; and Herbert K. Yee, D.D.S., '48, Sacramento.

Persons who are interested in the Patrons of Pacific should direct their request for information to the attention of Westgate in care of the Office of the President at the university.
