"HOME EC" AT PACIFIC

"Whoever Creates A Good Home Renders A Public Service."

—Oliver Wendell Holmes

This difficult business of creating a good American home is both a science and an art — that's the way the C.O.P. Department of Home Economics and Family Living looks at it. It is not something accomplished by mother at the sink and sewing machine. Father and the children, and many other skills are equally involved.

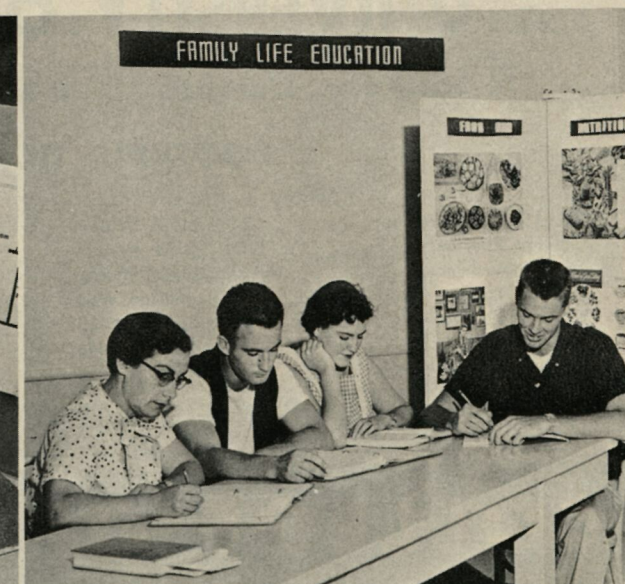

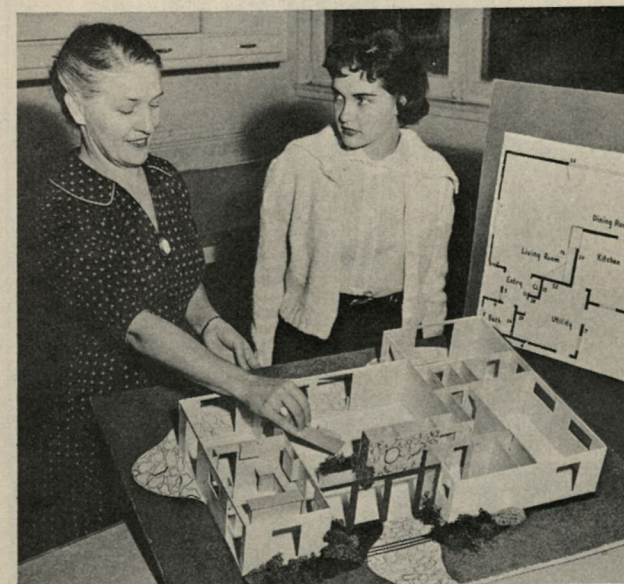

Since 90% of Pacific graduates are going into homemaking — regardless of the various business and professional vocations they will enter — the College considers this a fundamentally important part of a liberal education. It recommends that all students, not only majors in the Department, take at least Home Economics 40, a two-unit course called Marriage and Family Living. Here they tackle in advance the problems of modern marriage and family raising, including such subjects as family finance, fine arts in the family, and religion in family life.

In the Pacific home economics laboratories you can learn to stitch a fine seam or bake a soufflé that won't collapse, but these are mere details. Modern home and family education is not a matter of teaching basic skills.

It includes child care and guidance, clothing and textiles, foods and nutrition, home planning and furnishing, home management, and family relationship — including the place of the family in the local and world community. Home economics majors at Pacific must also take studies in psychology, sociology, religious education, physical and biological sciences, and other fields.

These major students in the department can choose from three different curricula: the Home and Family Living emphasis for those interested principally in the development of their own homes; the Homemaking Education emphasis to prepare teachers; and the Home Economics in Business emphasis to train for careers in sales, demonstration, interior design consultation, journalism, and other related jobs.

There are 38 full time majors now, but a total of more than 500 students will be enrolled in more than 30 different courses offered by the department during the year. Thirty-six men are now in such classes as Marriage and Family, Nutrition, and Home Management.

PACIFIC MARCHING BAND

Tonight the College of the Pacific Marching Band salutes one of the institutions of American life . . . the circus. To young and old, to rich and poor, to everyone the circus is a symbol of the great American tradition of showmanship. Half-time shows at football games can trace their ancestry to the musical pageants that accompanied the side shows and medicine men on their tours.

To the great American circus, and especially to Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey Circus which just completed a run in San Francisco, we dedicate tonight's show.

Children of all ages, welcome to the Big Top.
