Crimes Of Opportunity A Problem
Auto Thefts Plague Stockton and the Central Valley
By Andrew Mitchell
News Editor
For some criminals, it takes a couple minutes. For some of the more skillful, one minute is all it takes. Some have even been able to log in around 30 seconds.

That time is all it takes for a crook to obtain a new possession: a well-working vehicle.

Stockton, including University of the Pacific, ranked second in the country for auto thefts in 2004. Nearby Modesto has the unfortunate distinction of being first. Sacramento is fifth.

The valley’s problem with car thefts has much to do with the prevalence of methamphetamine, according to Michael Belcher, the director of Public Safety. Thieves pawn the items they steal out of cars to purchase drugs.

Out of the 4,000 car thefts in Stockton last year, 585 of them had their keys in the ignition. Fifty-three auto burglaries occurred on Pacific’s campus last year.

“These are crimes of opportunity,” said Belcher. Criminals don’t think ahead about burglarizing; they spot an opportunity on campus and take advantage of it.

“We average 20 arrests a month,” Belcher said. “Ninety-five percent of the suspects are not associated with the university.”

The latest incident happened at the Townhouse Apartments September 14. Two students reported that their vehicles had been entered. The suspects broke the side windows. One person was missing books and identification. The other had stereo equipment taken. The thieves presumably climbed over the back fence by the levee or followed a resident driving in when the gate was open.

A Public Safety flier went out warning residents of the potential danger.

“There’s a sense of security, a sense of safety,” said Belcher about the exposed valuables people leave in their cars. The Department of Public Safety recommends that drivers put their valuables in the trunk, remove stereo faceplates, and park in well-lit areas when leaving the car.

To record the incidents as they occur, Public Safety is required to publish their statistics on the internet. The publications resulted from the Jeanne Clery Act passed by Congress in 1990. Originally dubbed the “Crime Awareness and Campus Security Act of 1990,” the law’s purpose is to inform students, faculty, and parents of recent crimes on school campuses.

The Department of Public Safety is dedicated to making Pacific “the toughest place to commit a crime,” said Belcher. “These guys are so stupid that they’ll do it again and again until they get caught.”

Public Safety was granted police officer powers in 1983 making Pacific one of only two private universities in California with a full police force. Stanford University also has such a program.

Students on campus are urged to be alert and aware of their surroundings. Officer Belcher encourages people to contact Public Safety as soon as they know they’ve been robbed. Students can reach Public Safety at 946-2537.

The Central Valley is a prime spot for auto thefts. Modesto has the highest rate per capita in the country. Stockton is not far behind.

- University of the Pacific has seen a modest rise in auto thefts from 2002 to 2004. For 2004, the ratio of thefts was approximately one incident for every 288 students.
- Delta College, with nine times the population of Pacific, has over double the theft rate.
- Other California universities varied in their statistics.

Prom Bowling Kicks Off Ambassador’s Year

Erin Birmingham Editor-in-Chief

On Saturday September 16th at 3pm, the Pacific Ambassadors gathered at Pacific Bowling Alley for their annual Prom Bowling recruitment event.

Students dressed in prom dresses and suits and donned their classic bowling shoes to match. The Ambassadors on campus work as representatives of the administration to new students. They give campus tours, run orientation and host other on campus events where friendly faces are needed.

About 20 people were in attendance.

For more information about the Ambassadors or becoming an Ambassador, visit http://www.pacific.edu/studentlife/ambassador

Activities Fair

Thursday, September 14 Pacific held its annual activities fair. The event, held on the WPC Lawn, gave new students the opportunity to learn about various clubs, Greek houses, and campus life. A live band provided entertainment while Bon Appetit served dinner.

Fall Bid Day brought all the sororities together to celebrate their hard work and congratulate each house on their successful new additions. Delta Gammacheered for their new 7 members, along with Alpha Phi's proud 7. Delta Delta Delta's 9 women walked on a red carpet, and Kappa Alpha Theta roared with pride for their new 9.

Each sorority spends the day celebrating for not only its members, but also Pacific's successful Greek life. When the day was over, each sorority pumped itself up for another fun fall and for the bright future for formal recruitment.

The Rush Is On

Abbey Golden Staff Writer

Balloons, glitter, girls cheering, and limos. No, this isn't a Justin Timberlake concert. It's Fall Bid Day! On Saturday September 16th, the four social sororities proudly celebrated a successful fall semester of recruitment.

Every fall each sorority works hard to bring fabulous women into their houses. The first week of school every sorority opened their houses and welcomed Pacific women to come and join them for a themed event. These events not only provided hundreds of women to get a good look at sorority life, but also provided the opportunity to meet a wide range of new friends.

The process for recruitment began on Friday, September 16th when sororities headed out to find and give their selected women the opportunity to join their organizations. In order to participate in fall recruitment, Pacific women had to have second semester freshman standing or higher and a cumulative G.P.A. of at least 2.5. However, even with those qualifications, women were encouraged to attend events and sign up for formal recruitment for the spring.

Reverse Card, Wild Draw Four

Do you ever get that feeling that you’re getting old? Think about this for a moment, Disney’s The Lion King came out twelve years ago. Does that seem strange to you? How about this, The Little Mermaid came out seventeen years ago.

In any case, while I was having this little revelation, I started to recall all of the toys and fads that were popular in the 90’s, and I came to a conclusion that for the most part, you know what? They failed miserably in the entertaining me department.

Adolescent boys experienced the resurgence of yo-yos, the rise of Pokemon cards, and the worst offender of them all, Pogs.

They were the worst because they were easily the biggest scam of all time. In case you aren’t quite familiar with the concept of Pogs, they were those little cardboard circles with designs on them, usually a holographic skull of some sort, which each player would try to flip over by slamming a metal disc aptly named “Slammers,” on top of them. Strange, yes I know, but what really gets me is that we bought into something so stupid. Who plays a game where the only goal is to flip over a piece of cardboard?

Ladies, don’t think that you were guilt free from those youthful toys of retardation. You ladies had the most pointless toys of all.

First, there were tamagotchis and gigapets, annoying little handheld digital animals displayed on a screen that would incessantly beep if you didn’t feed it. To make matters worse, the only way to keep them going would be to clean them up after you took a crap, which you had to otherwise your Tamagotchi would wallow in its own feces, die from unhappiness, and then come back to life again, hatched from an egg.

“Hey, don’t worry if you don’t feed your dog for four days, or if you come back home to find your malnourished pet dancing around making snow angels in the dirt, which you had to otherwise your Pet Cemetary would go down to, “Imagine the most ridiculous thing in the world, add a couple Xplosions (see what I did there?), and then the jingle that sounds like it’s sung by the lead singer of Journey kicks in, “Crossfire… you’ll get caught up in the... Crossfire!” Then, after one of the boys loses the game, the other gets ejected into Mount Vesuvius or something, all while Steve Perry is screaming, “Crossfire!” over and over again in the background.

There are of course amazing games with less interesting advertising such as UNO, but don’t even get me started on that one. I’ll save that one for another time.

So in the actual commercial, two boys enter an arena by teleporting there in lighting bolts (extreme!), and then the jingle that sounds like it’s sung by the lead singer of Journey kicks in, “Crossfire… you’ll get caught up in the... Crossfire!” Then, after one of the boys loses the game, the other gets ejected into Mount Vesuvius or something, all while Steve Perry is screaming, “Crossfire!” over and over again in the background.

Do you like Mexican food Mi Ranchito. Tony, being full blooded Mexican, has been looking in Stockton for a Mexican restaurant that makes authentic Mexican food just like his grandma makes.

I had a steak quesadilla and a cheesy enchilada combo plate with rice and beans. Tony had an all beef combo plate with a burrito, a taco and an enchilada. Mi Ranchito is not one of those typical Mexican restaurants that serve you food that is pre-made but they take the time to make their delicious Mexican food the Mexican way. With side dishes of rice and beans that top off the authentic Mexican dish.

Do you know Mi Ranchito is such a legit, authentic Mexican restaurant when ladies who don’t speak English try to sell you flowers while you are eating and the menu is in Spanish and in parentheses is the English translation.

Mi Ranchito is located in the heart of Stockton. Take Pacific Ave. south and make a left turn on Harding Ave. going east. Go two blocks and make a right hand turn on Center Street. Take Center St. down and Mi Ranchito is located on the right hand side one block past the freeway on the corner of Center St. and Church St.

Look for the side of the building that says Mi Ranchito, Tony and I thoroughly enjoyed our Mi Ranchito experience and the delicious Mexican food. We give Mi Ranchito 9 finger licks out of 10 and recommend Mi Ranchito to anyone. So, if you are tired of a burrito in a bowl, try Mi Ranchito for some real Mexican food.

One Man's Trip up Half Dome

Hello Everyone,

Michael (my roommate), Jon (my friend) and I all drove up to Yosemite this weekend to hike Half Dome. We left Stockton at 8:30 PM and got up to the base of the trail at about 1 AM. The hike is 8.5 miles one-way and it climbs over a mile in elevation from base to top. Our supplies for the hike up consisted of flashlights, 3 liters of water, a few energy bars and lots of extra clothes for the chilly temperatures at the top. The temperature in the valley of Yosemite was supposed to range from 20-52 deg, so I thought shorts and a t-shirt would be good for the hike. The trail was never flat for the first 3 miles or the last 3 miles of the hike, so warmth was not an issue and I quickly drenched my t-shirt in sweat. At around 4 AM I put on a sweatshirt, but only really because my arms were cold; I was still sweating, but my arms had gone almost numb.

We made it to the top at around 5:30 AM. We didn't quite make it to the very top because one of our group members was running on little sleep before we set off and it was catching up with him at the top. He was on the verge of passing out, so I didn't think it was the best time to be scaling steep mountains, so we stopped about 200 yards from the top. We were able to get plenty of pictures before, during and after sunrise and sat around when the sun came up on the top. We left the top at 8:30 AM for our return trip and got to see everything we had missed the night before. There were plenty of places that were completely unfamiliar and others that caught us off guard. We had passed a very large and impressive waterfall the night before and thought they were just big rapids claiming to be a waterfall. There were also plenty of glacier carved valleys on the hike that were pretty impressive. We got down around 1 PM and drove back to Stockton. I had to relieve myself of driving and let one of my napping friends take over after the 17 miles on no sleep. When I got home I rested for a while, took a shower, and then fell asleep around 7 PM and woke up at 8 AM this morning. I am surprisingly not too sore from the hike. Really only my right knee (which I tweaked at the top and walked down in pain on) and my left hip are sore.

So, all in all it was a really fun trip. Hopefully you all enjoy the pictures.

Richmond

PS - The beard helped tremendously at the top and I don't want to hear anything about how ugly my beard is. Most of you are familiar and have to love me no matter what and the rest of you aren't family, so I don't really care. Okay, I do, so I'll pretend you have to love me as well.

PPS - The hiking shoes were a donation from the church of indie-dom, specifically from the rt. reverend.

A New Beginning

For Freshmen

By: Nicole Van de Star * Silva

Columnist

As young children, we dreamed of one day attending high school, dancing at prom, receiving our high school diploma, and then beginning college. For all of us here, we have achieved every one of those, but for some of us, the college experience is just beginning. We will all experience it differently, but in some ways, we will experience it in the same way. The question is, "What is it like being a new college student?"

The transition between high school and college can be exciting, terrifying, different, and confusing. What is it like transitioning from high school to college? "The transition from high school to college is a big step from the immaturity of high school to the reality of college. Here is where you start focusing on what you want to do in life and in high school you are still experimenting. Transitioning is the point where you narrow in on where you want your life to go (like a big funnel if you will)." (Sarah Quiroz).

Within the first three weeks of school, students have only had a taste of academic life on campus. They are still learning what is expected of them as well as learning time management. Socially, many school activities such as Tiger Nights have taken place as well as many off campus parties. How have the first few weeks of college life been at Pacific? "They've been pretty laid back. Everyone is getting to know each other and all the people I have met have been pretty great. I have had a pretty nice transition. The first few weeks have been pretty cool and the homework has been light. So far it's great." (Priya Upadhyayula).

"College, along with many other things in life, present challenges. Not all are academic, but emotional, mental, and some physical. What challenges are you starting to face, or do you think you will face in the near future? "At the beginning I was a little overwhelmed, but it's gotten better. I think getting my work done will be a big challenge because it is a lot harder than high school." (Marissa Woo).

Most of the time before we begin a new chapter in our lives, we imagine what it would be like. Academically, is college what you expected it to be? "Academically, yes I think so. I expected it to be harder than high school and it really is." (Priya Upadhyayula). What about socially? "I really didn't know what to expect in college, but altogether I really like the impression it's left on me." (Sarah Quiroz).

In an academic setting, we all know that you will learn, that is the main point, but do you think that the social experience in college will help for the future? "I think it will because of all the challenges and I know it will help me with my career later." (Marissa Woo).

When you hear about the social aspect of college party like it's the end of the world tomorrow. A legend of this University who graduated this past spring once said, "...we pound handles, not fists." Take this motto to any University around the country and you too can probably out drink anyone. I found this to be true at Chico State, rumored to be one of the greatest party schools in California. Pacific students need to "blow off steam" every now and then. Pacific has many things to offer, but students aren't carrying backpacks full of books.

Pacific is a very ambitious University that prides themselves on academic success. As I have learned it, the administrators on this campus want the outside world to view Pacific as a somewhat clean slate school where students eat, sleep and study. Not eat, sleep, go to class and..." (Sarah Quiroz).

Why do Pacific Students feel the need to Party

Take a look outside your building on any Friday or Saturday night (or for some, Thursday's too). You will see countless people walking around, going from one place to another. It's as though at 10PM, class is in session, but students aren't carrying backpacks full of books.

Experiencing More Than Just Class

Part of the college experience is going to see and enjoy non-mainstream bands whose lyrics are tattooed in our brain from constantly pressing the repeat buttons on our ipods and stereos. To be able to go to a very small hole in the wall venue in which the artists sweat literally spews all over your face and the mosh pit keeps taking your attention away from the bands you adore is truly priceless.

College gives us the chance to spend a Monday night with one of our favorite bands who most people have never heard off. For one night the magic of singing at the top of our lungs, bouncing and letting the body free flow with seizure moves, Bboys would be proud of is unexplainable. It would be catastrophic to not experience all the perks and excuses college gives us. Part of this golden opportunity is taking advantage of being able to connect with a band that is not yet a household name. Seizing the moment and going to the venue is ultimately one of the greatest gifts one can give to themselves.

The Fat Cat had the pleasure of hosting The Expendables and Pepper. The same Expendables that ASUOP brought to our school and made one night at Pacific worth $38,000 dollars. There were all forms of social groups from Pacific and other local colleges. These groups shared the joy of experience great music, life and togetherness. In the real world none of these students would have the opportunity to enjoy the company of each other but for one night we were all close friends.

The importance of the social aspect of college is to capture moments and thoroughly enjoy it. What better way than a great show with a small time band with a big time sound. This is part of the college experience and something we all should strive to partake in more often. Great live music is all around us; we just have to take the time from our busy days on the couch to find them.

Headliner Pepper rocked the show with their mixture of reggae, punk and dub sound.

The papers are studiously cramming their brain full of information on Organic Chemistry, but I am sure I will see them out "on the town" on Friday night because they need that relaxation which partying provides for them.

On my last, non-RA-interrupted night of drinking away brain cells I found myself very relaxed. The papers I have due in a few days were not even a thought in my head. The troubles in Iraq and our Monkey president in office didn't leave any sense of worry in my heart. Alcohol, a very body numbing poison relaxes your person, go ask anyone at an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting.

So what does all this mean? Pacific students are over worked, students who hold jobs outside of campus while still taking a full course load crave partying and relaxation. Students with just enough units to be considered a full-time student can usually be found in their rooms practicing their Beirut (beer pong) skills or working on their World of Warcraft character.

Everyone needs to relax every now and then, to clear their mind and what better way to do it at Pacific but to grab a brew with your friends and reflect on times past and the future ahead. But for many, living in the present is the way to go, so head over to Valley Brew and order a pitcher of your favorite beer.

from friends, family, teachers, etc. they tell you that the friendship you make in college with last a lifetime. Do you agree or disagree? "Your friends in college are the ones you’re going to be doing homework with in the late morning hours, eating makeshift meals, cramming for tests, and hanging out in your dorms with. These are the moments you are real with each other, and being real is what makes true friends. Yes, I do believe that college grows everlasting friendships." (Sarah Quiroz).

For some of us the college experience is just beginning, but as you can tell by speaking to your friends, introducing yourself to new people, and even looking in the mirror. We are all great individuals and although college will be difficult, it will also be a wild adventure.

The papers are studiously cramming their brain full of information on Organic Chemistry, but I am sure I will see them out "on the town" on Friday night because they need that relaxation which partying provides for them.

On my last, non-RA-interrupted night of drinking away brain cells I found myself very relaxed. The papers I have due in a few days were not even a thought in my head. The troubles in Iraq and our Monkey president in office didn't leave any sense of worry in my heart. Alcohol, a very body numbing poison relaxes your person, go ask anyone at an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting.

So what does all this mean? Pacific students are over worked, students who hold jobs outside of campus while still taking a full course load crave partying and relaxation. Students with just enough units to be considered a full-time student can usually be found in their rooms practicing their Beirut (beer pong) skills or working on their World of Warcraft character.

Everyone needs to relax every now and then, to clear their mind and what better way to do it at Pacific but to grab a brew with your friends and reflect on times past and the future ahead. The ESB original ale that was left in my fridge fixed that up right quick. Maybe I'm not like most students. My peers...
Not Another NAM

The world’s greatest moments of cooperation have occurred in a time of war to unite against a common enemy, from the United States and the Soviet Union against the Nazis to the twenty nations that liberated Kuwait from Iraq. It seems as though the tables have turned, and the once third world countries in a bi-polar world are gaining power and influence, finding a common enemy in the United States and Israel.

The Non-Aligned Movement, or NAM, once thought of as a defunct Cold War relic, has recently strewed harsh criticism of the United States at a conference in Havana on September 16. The NAM was created in 1961 as an alternative to the bi-polar superpower alliances of the Cold War. There are now 118 member states that make up nearly two thirds of the United Nations and 55 percent of the world’s population.

What makes today’s group particularly different from that of the Cold War era is that a few of its member states are particularly hostile to the United States and are pursuing, or already possess, nuclear weapons.

In the opening statement to the group, of which the likes of Venezuela, Syria, Iran, and North Korea are members, Cuba’s foreign minister said that its strength in numbers is more necessary today than ever in order to denounce “hegemonic imperialism.” They were apparently referring to the United States.

In one of its most stark documents adopted at the conference, the NAM hacked Iran and North Korea’s right to nuclear pursuits, despite North Korea’s recent testing of ballistic missiles in July. Iran has surpassed the deadline to halt its uranium enrichment program despite threats of sanctions by the United States and other countries, and North Korea said it will not return to the negotiating table with the US despite growing sanctions. The NAM offered cold comfort in urging Iran to cooperate with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

President Hugo Chavez of Venezuela, who has said that President Bush is worse than Hitler, has been tightening his relationship with many countries not very partial to the United States. In a recent visit to Syria, Mr. Chavez said of his host that “We have the same political vision and we will resist together the American Imperialist aggression.” He plans to build an oil refinery in the country along with the support of President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad of Iran.

Mr. Chavez has been strengthening ties with the oil rich Persian and Arab nations surrounding the Middle East, such as Iran and Syria, building what they hope to be a “multi-polar world” no longer dominated by the United States.

These events have many implications for the United States. Firstly, many of these nations are hardly democratic, if not authoritarian. The democratic peace theory suggests that democracies do not fight each other, and many authoritarian states such as North Korea would be fools to face the United States alone. In what seems to be memoirs of the Cold War, other countries, such as Syria and Iran, have resorted to supporting proxy fronts in a fight against the United States or its allies, such as Syrian and Iranian support for Hezbollah in the recent war between Israel and Lebanon. Yet the recent call of the Non-Aligned Nations to ally together to fight “American imperialist aggression” is an entirely new, bold, and realistic position.

This call to arms is exacerbated by Iran’s uranium enrichment process under a leader who has called for the destruction of Israel. US policy since 1979 has diplomatically cut off Iran, but recent attempts at a solution to its enrichment program suggest that the US is willing to talk with the Iranians. These talks have yet to crawl out of the shadows of mistrust that the US feels towards Iran.

Secondly, the United States and the members of OPEC share an alliance built upon black gold, but each and every one of these countries are also part of the NAM. This has serious implications for our economy, security, and lifestyle. A doctrine of suppression against America by the Persian Gulf region will be regarded as an assault on the vital interests of the United States of America, and such an assault will be repelled by any means necessary, including military force.” A new alliance against the US would be seen as an outside force post fiat.

Thirdly, a return to power politics through indiscriminate alliances denotes the notion that a clash of civilizations is on the verge. Shi’a Iranians and Sunni Syrians both supported Shi’a Hezbollah in the recent war with Israel. The alliances that Mr. Chavez is building with regimes hostile to the United States are in direct retaliation to the United States. North Korea criticized America for being imperialistic and continued with the general anti-US sentiment of the NAM conference. These civilizations are unifying against a common enemy, the US; and a common ideology, imperialism.

If direct military conflict with these regimes does not ensue, they will continue to support, fund, and arm proxy fronts to fight their conflicts for them. The acquisition of nuclear weapons by this new alliance will only exacerbate the problem, with ramifications that would be disastrous to world security. The world’s hegemonic security provided by the United States would be in serious jeopardy.

In conclusion, the United States faces many more threats than terrorism alone, just as it faced many more threats than communism alone during the Cold War. Yet during that war, our attention was so entrenched in defeating communism that we even supported Islamic extremists to lend off its influence. Today we face a similar threat in terrorism, and although we have learned from the all-engulfing policies against communism in the Cold War, we cannot let our guard down to any threat that promulgates its hatred of our country.

The Night of Could Haves

Arash Scott Behnam

For one mere night Pacific had its opportunity to mimic its best Ohio State impersonation, but as easily as the dream was born it dwindled to: "could have been, should have been, and almost was." There is a cliché that compares the difference between 'coming close' and winning, to the difference between horse-shoes and hand grenades. Pacific fans were forced to double-fist the second analogy of emotions on a bitter Thursday night. It is not often that the Pacific community could celebrate success this early in the year, but Thursday the 14th is one night that will pulsate like a cold dagger brought forth by Brutus in Caesar's back.

The Tiger soccer team was turning heads nationally, and their match-up with BYU had a number of important attributes to go with records. There was the unbeaten streak, as the Tigers had not encountered a loss this season. There was a streak within a streak: the Tigers had not given up a single goal all year, and for 85 minutes, BYU had a front row seat in understanding the Tiger D's love affair with goose eggs. The defense led by goalie Jaime Souza and defender Kelsey Nagel had flabbergasted the Cougar offensive all night, and the Pacific counter attack added to the frustrations of Joseph Smith's girls.

BYU came into the game with a 3-0-1 record, but Thursday the 14th is one of those ‘could haves and should haves,' and no riots.

NFL Week 3 Predictions

By Adam Nofflett
NFL Guru
Jacksonville Jaguars at Indianapolis Colts

This is going to be a competitive battle between two of the top teams in the NFL. The Colts look like they have not lost a step after losing star running back Edgerrin James from last year, and are the early favorites to win this year's Super Bowl. The Jaguars have a young and improved receiving core that will be catching the pigskin from starting quarterback Byron Leftwich who is in his fourth year. So far this season, Leftwich has taken a lot of criticism from the fans and a big game this weekend would keep most of the critics quiet. Unfortunately, the Jaguars defense is not strong enough in the secondary to handle the Colts offensive attack. Expect Manning to have another great game.

Colts 31 Jaguars 20

Chicago Bears at Minnesota Vikings

The Minnesota Vikings are coming off an impressive overtime win against the Carolina Panthers, who many believe have a great chance of making it to the Super Bowl out of the NFC. Brad Johnson is the lowest rated quarterback and has not scored any touchdowns all year. The Eagles have looked good the first two games, the Eagles lead in the fourth quarter and eventually lost in overtime. This will be Alex Smith and the Niners biggest test of the season so far, and while they have looked good the first two games, the Eagles are going to come in trying to avenge last week's embarrassment.

Eagles 28 49ers 13

Carolina Panthers at Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Before the season started, Sports Illustrated, as well as many other notable sports writers, picked the Carolina Panthers to win the Super Bowl. So far they have not met expectations as they have started the season 0-2. This has to do with the fact that the Pittsburgh Steelers, with top ranked opponents, are out to prove they have not lost any ground since the Super Bowl. This should be a great battle between the two teams who will not settle for anything less then the Super Bowl. In the end, Chad Johnson will be dancing in the end zone, as the Bengals will come out with a win, and Plaxico Burress are giving the Eagles an interception. The offense, led by Smith, also features running back Frank Gore, and wide receiver Antonio Bryant, who tore up the St. Louis defense last week. The Giants are coming off a disappointing loss against the Giants. They blew a 17 point lead in the fourth quarter and eventually lost in overtime. This will be Alex Smith and the Niners biggest test of the season so far, and while they have looked good the first two games, the Eagles are going to come in trying to avenge last week's embarrassment.

Seahawks 20 Giants 14

Cincinnati Bengals at Pittsburgh Steelers

This is a match-up no true football fan should miss. Last year the Cincinnati Bengals won the AFC North while the Steelers took the wild card. The Bengals looked to be on the verge of making it deep in the playoffs before an injury to Carson Palmer left the Bengals watching the Steelers eventually win the Super Bowl. Palmer is healthy, and looks just as good as he did before the injury. The Steelers are coming off a Monday Night showdown with Jacksonville and are out to prove they have not lost any ground since the Super Bowl. This should be a great battle between two teams who will not settle for anything less then the Super Bowl. In the end, Chad Johnson will be dancing in the end zone, as the Bengals will come out with a win, and completely dominate your opponent. It seems to me that this year's team is really coming off that spectacular comeback victory against the Eagles. Eli Manning and Plaxico Burress are giving secondary around the league headaches, but this Seattle defense has the right players to counterattack the Giants offense.

Steelers 17 Bengals 14

just need to cut down on the little mistakes like pass receptions and precise passing and we will be fine." Former Cathedral Catholic all star Mary Davis states, "It’s great to be apart of a team that has the potential to win a Nor Pac championship. Coming from high school to a top division 1 program helped me learn that devotion and hard work is necessary, and it takes the extra work on and off the field to be successful at this level. In division 1 athletics it takes all of us girls pulling for the same thing, and that is a Nor Pac championship." Davis says, "Bonding off the field causes us to play good on the field, and I’m happy that I can play for a program with such cool coaches, and great players. We are each others family away from home."

Freshman sensation Katy McDonough received Nor Pac rookie of the week honors for two consecutive weeks, while Freshman phenomena Lisa Muhl received rookie of the week honors last week. McDonough says, "it felt really good, but it was more of a team award because if I was not playing with such good athletes then there is a chance that I may have not won the award. Im not to worry about the award, Im still working hard everyday like the award never took place".

This year leading the way is senior captain Vianney Campos. This year Vianney is said to be one of the top women's field hockey players in the nation. Campos is leading the country in goals scored with 15 and total points with 32. This is the first time in school history that a field hockey player received these honors. Campos was named Nor Pac player of the week, and she is averaging 3.5 points per game and 1.7 goals per game. I got a chance to ask Campos, "What did it feel like to be looked upon as one of the top field hockey players in the nation?" Campos replied, "It's kind of weird because last season and previous seasons I would look up the rankings for goals, and I always wanted to be there. I made a commitment to myself last spring and I told myself that I would have my best season as a senior no matter what it took."

I asked Campos, "what do you see yourself doing after this year?" Campos responded with, "This summer I had the opportunity to train with some members of the national team, and participate in national team camps and tournaments. So after this year I hope to become a national team player. Possibly going to the Olympics would be nice, I will probably get my masters here at Pacific, and I would like to give back to the field hockey program because they have done so much for me. Our program has grown tremendously in these last couple of years, and it will continue to grow and I want to be apart of that. Besides there's nothing like being apart of Pacific athletics. "So far this season Pacific has beaten: American University, U Mass, New Hampshire, Ball State, Saint Louis, and hope to beat Stanford to add to their win column. With the talented freshman core that has players like Vianney Campos to model themselves after, the Tiger field hockey future is as bright as ever.
