New Campus Club
Joshua Foster
Guest Reporter

The Pacific Young Democrats (the PYDs) are a new organization on campus this semester. In the past, there has been the UOP Democrats, which dissolved at the end of last year due to a lack of support.

The new organization seeks to elect democratic candidates, encourage political involvement, instill students with democratic values, and give students a chance to experience government at the grassroots level.

The establishment of the club was necessary to represent the Democratic Party's view on campus in opposition to the College Republicans.

There was a debate held on Monday, November 7 between the PYDs and the College Republicans regarding the statewide special election.

White Ribbon Campaign
Phi Delta Theta takes action to end violence against women
Jeff Morgan

In accordance with its core values, Phi Delta Theta, a social fraternity on the Pacific campus, is unveiling its campaign for women's rights. The campaign will begin in the coming weeks to raise awareness about women's issues everywhere.

Members of the fraternity will be selling white ribbons in different areas of the campus and all of the proceeds will go to support the "The White Ribbon Campaign," which is a world wide campaign consisting mainly of men in an effort to end male violence against women.

The fraternity endorses this organization wholeheartedly. "We recognize the need for such a campaign everywhere in America and hope that any donations we make will help the cause, but really we're just doing what we can to fight for the rights of women," said fraternity president Christopher McDermott. "I just hope that we can get as many people as possible wearing these ribbons and showing their support for this campaign."

The website for this campaign also sells shirts and other products bearing their slogan "My Strength is Not for Hurting." The organization endorses wearing such clothing as a statement against male violence against women.

In addition to launching the white ribbon campaign on campus, the Phi Delta Theta members are inviting a speaker to come and talk about women's issues. Information will be posted around campus regarding the date and time of the lecture.

ASUOP senators represent
Sandy Goldberg

All students have had issues involving the school. You'd be lying to yourself if you said you hadn't. But did you know that there are a group of students on campus who will not only listen to your complaints, but do something about them?

The ASUOP Senate is comprised of a student representative from each of the seven schools, and three that serve at-large. In weekly meetings they meet with members of the administration, address student concerns and discuss what is happening on our campus. "[Senate is] a student governing force which advocates for all student needs," explained Adam Ellison, Vice President of ASUOP.

Each student who represents a specific school tries their best to vote with his or her constituents in mind as well as report back to them when something important occurs. Senator Suzie Mangum said, "I represent the School of Education by bringing up issues that are exclusive to education students and then I bring back those issues to my constituents."

Others go to meetings of student organizations to explain what is going on with ASUOP and see what concerns are from those groups. "I contact the President of the

It gules you to the TV every other year. You hear about it all over the news. You even look at the athletes on your morning cereal box. The Olympic Games is one of the largest sporting events, watched and participated in the world over. This winter, eight Pacific Sport Management students and a professor are going to see the event up close and personal by volunteering in the Olympic Village in Turin, Italy. Originally, Professor Linda Lyman had planned to organize a group of students to volunteer at the Olympic Games in Beijing in 2008, but her current students wanted in on the action. Sarah Freeman, a junior, specifically wanted the opportunity to go to the Olympics before she graduated and asked that the trip be organized this year. Professor Lyman told her, “If you can find out what we need to do, we’ll do it.” So Freeman got to work calling and emailing the Olympic committee to find out what volunteer opportunities were available and how to get Pacific students involved.

Because the students will be missing 10 days of class for the trip, strict participation requirements were made and a proposal was submitted to Marisa Kelly, Associate Dean of the College of the Pacific for approval. After COP approved the proposal for the students to take the trip, planning moved forward. Students had to have taken majoring in Sports Science, have taken the proper prerequisite classes, have a 3.0 GPA and be able to pay their own way. Freeman also added, “They also have to be a part of other volunteer experiences.”

Once the students are in Turin, they will be staying in an apartment within walking distance of the Olympic Village. Obtaining affordable housing during the Olympics was no easy task: “We’re extremely lucky to have an affordable apartment in the center of Turin, especially considering how hotel prices have skyrocketed,” said Professor Hundley. After one day of training and like orientation they will work for 12 hours a day with only one day off.

In order to get the most out of the experience, there are set up speakers to and talk to them about involvement in the Olympic Games, in order to learn as many aspects of putting on a huge sporting event as can. “We’re doing that specifically to make connections for other Olympics,” said Professor Lyman who is hopeful. See OLYMPICS page 3.
Diwali, a the Hindu celebration that translates to "row of lamps" was celebrated by Pacific students last Saturday night in the back room of the quad dining hall.

The PYDs seek to become involved by throwing more events on campus, volunteering for local campaigns and the Democratic Party, and attending local democratic conferences. By becoming involved in the community, the PYDs seek to be involved by throwing more events on campus, volunteering for local campaigns and the Democratic Party, and attending local democratic conferences. By becoming involved in the community, important things you can do for yourself because sport is so global," you dream of being able to do things like that," said Freeman. Now the students can look forward to preparations for the Games, and increasing the visibility of their unique program.

Student Senate to address student concerns. "Currently CSS is working on an open forum for issues in the Conservatory and I'll be there to address issues on the overall campus," noted Sutherland. Senate has been able to represent students in several timely issues throughout the year. President Donald DeRosa and Vice President Joanna Royce-Davis met with the Senate earlier in the year to discuss tuition raises, the new University center, and goals for student enrollment. Student Senators were able to voice their views on these changes going on for Pacific's campus and fight for students' opinions.

More than the weekly meetings, committees are formed from the Senate that decide important issues as well. For example, the Club Funding Board decides how funding is allocated to all the clubs and student organizations on campus. "We allocate about $30,000 each semester to over 60 clubs, which helps fund a number of events on campus from dances, to film festivals, to athletic road trips," said Chris Tredennick, Senator for the School of Engineering and Computer Science.

If you have an issue with this campus, and you want your voice to be heard, you can come to any of the Senate meetings Monday at 4pm in the Spruce room or talk to the Senator who represents you.
Suburban youths clash with riot police in Paris

By Benjamin Dunohv
Staff Writer

If you are unfamiliar with what is going on in France right now, there has been rioting in the streets by the poor African immigrants mainly in the suburbs of Paris, which resemble the inner city ghettos of the United States, since October 27. The people have now turned their frustrations of unemployment and impoverished living conditions into rage by rioting in the streets and against the police because two of their fellow immigrants were electrocuted to death in an electrical outpost where they were hiding from police that they thought were chasing them (the police were, according to many press reports, not chasing them, although the rioters alleged that the police were indeed chasing them). They used the death of these two boys as a catalyst to launch an uprising. What do these immigrants expect? They come as unskilled workers from countries with terrible living conditions and a horrible quality of life (hence the reason they left in the first place), yet they expect to be treated as though they have something of value to offer in the welcoming society. What do these immigrants expect? They come as unskilled workers from unindustrialized countries to a highly industrialized society and expect to find work; and when they do not find work, they rise against the organized society as if it has done something personally immoral to them. Blasphemy, anyone? Please, if you disagree with me, write me.

Muir, Roosevelt brought to life

By Shone Cipris
Perspectives Editor

John Muir and president Theodore Roosevelt are playing the "scar game." The two historical figures take turns telling the stories behind the various scars on their bodies. Roosevelt is an enthusiastic player, working himself into a lather while excitedly recounting the hunting adventures behind his scars. "Left arm done," he booms, "Now let's do the head." A slightly befuddled Muir responds, "I would gladly cede my head to you, Mr. President," before attempting to steer the conversation back towards environmental issues.

This was the amusing opening scene in "The Tramp and the Rough Rider," a short play staged at Pacific Theater this past Thursday. The play starts the moment after the two men, a historic photo of the 3,000-foot cliff Point in Yosemite National Park is 1903. They had embarked on a camping expedition which time Muir impressed upon Roosevelt the importance of the valley. The two many issues but a find some common ground. While it is unclear what is going on in France right now, there has been rioting in the streets by the poor African immigrants mainly in the suburbs of Paris, which resemble the inner city ghettos of the United States, since October 27. The people have now turned their frustrations of unemployment and impoverished living conditions into rage by rioting in the streets and against the police because two of their fellow immigrants were electrocuted to death in an electrical outpost where they were hiding from police that they thought were chasing them (the police were, according to many press reports, not chasing them, although the rioters alleged that the police were indeed chasing them). A rebuttal to "Tiger Heaven"

By Marcel "Zealous" Gibson
Columnist

Dear Author of the Article to the Left,

Thank you very much for responding to my article titled, "Tiger Heaven," and sharing your thoughts. It's much appreciated that you were willing to voice your opinion, and I believe I speak for the entire Perspectives staff when I say, "Shout! Shout! Let it all out! These are the things..."

I believe that many of the improvements incorporated in the Campaign for Pacific are going to improve the quality of education at this amazing institution. I simply am questioning three projects; the University Center, the Baseball Stadium and the Library Expansion. For example, I totally support the new Biology Building and Health Sciences Building.

Would it help to put in perspective that not too long ago some dorms were closed because of a lack of enrollment at Pacific? And now, housing is trying to find rooms for the massive amounts of students coming to the University. The campus and the school needs to reflect its growing amount and staying competitive with other private institutions in California, and the rest of the country.

Does your Breakfast Burrito help bio students work in an up-to-date lab, or baseball players to feel at home in their own stadium, or students get a coffee late at night, or students to use a brand new gym for intramurals? I don’t believe it can. But it’s only the burrito you’re worried about, I’m sure that you will be able to get one at 2 in the morning at the 24-hour café to help that hanging over.

A sin by any other name

By Benjamin Dunphy
Staff Writer

Saddened not only by the loss of the priceless documents taken from me when the thief made the choice to better his/her life by worsening another, I am pained by the realization that the thief made the choice to discover their lack of human empathy in the ensuing aftermath. Thirty-five, seventy dollars: three times what the item is worth; what incite the rectification of such heinous acts is reminiscent of terrorism. Harming others for your own purpose, whether murder for political motives or a lustful desire to thieve another’s property, is a socially destabilizing act of cowardice.

"Thief, if you question why there is war, murder, and injustice in the world, look in the mirror." Apart from murder, thievery can be forgiven without loss if the property is returned. Unreturned thievery reeks of the stench of brutal unforgiving murder: it is sin without remorse that terrorizes our everyday lives just as its evil compatriot.

Intellectual property, in the case described here, is also irreplaceable once taken. Many documents and research papers drenched in my tears and sweat are gone forever, all because one person thought they had scored a free twenty dollar USB jumpdrive. The documents lost were priceless; I would have gladly given this person twenty dollars to buy them one of their own had I known I was going to lose everything academically important to me because someone was in dire need of such a cheap piece of technology. Thief, an independent stance against the rules of society undermines the whole point of a society. It is interdependence that defines a society; for we are all dependent on one another every second of our lives. You depend on the person sitting next to you not to kill you just as I depended on you not to steal from me. You have let me down in this pact, and I hope for your sake that the person sitting next to you does not let you down as you have me.

The enforcers of the societal boundaries who break the set rules as an order of punishment also undermine the point of a society. Murder cannot be avenged with murder. Those who have been stolen from are more likely to lose faith in humanity and steal from others. Those who are beat when they are children are more likely to beat their own. The states which combat terrorism with violence only breed more of it.

Whether rival gangs or rival states, violence is violence. The only thing that separates a gangster from the president is the legitimacy of the means to reach the end. Yet separate as well are the ends which are reached, one for the benefit of an entitee peoples (so we’re told) and the other for however the gangster chooses to invest his money. Different perceptions of reality and myriad situations still lead to the worldwide principle: survive.

Yet survival has reached unprecedented heights thanks to society, to the cooperation and dependence I mentioned above, remember, thief? Everything we industrialized countries enjoy is because of the benefits of societal cooperation. We are an educated society that understands the independent relationships we share with each and every member, visitor, and even enemy. This understanding creates a peace, which is why liberal democracies do not fight each other—they understand that cooperation is more beneficial to all. Thief, if you question why there is war, murder, and injustice in the world, look in the mirror.

I hope that I have expressed to you that societal rules are the only thing that keeps the world turning. Life is too short to harm another for your own benefit, for one day you too will die, and (according to my-beliefs) you will be judged. Even if you do not believe in an afterlife, we can choose to make this crazy world our own Heaven or an anarchic Hell. As one of the greatest men to ever live once said, “You must be the change you wish to see in the world.” That man was Mahatma Gandhi.

Delta Upsilon’s Haunted House a huge success

The Men of Delta Upsilon / Omega Phi Alpha would like to thank all of the participants who helped in the annual Haunted House on October 26th. It was a huge success! This was made possible by the students of the University of the Pacific, volunteers from on-campus sororities, the men of DU/OPA, the Stockton Community, advertising by KWIN, and the support of elementary schools in the greater Stockton area.

Over $750 was raised by the Boys and Girls Club as well as three large bins of donated canned goods.

We look forward to an wonderfully scary and successful Haunted House this year. Thanks to all the people who helped make this year another good Halloween. -Derek Herboldshiser

Ah, it's that time of the year again, the time when it gets too chilly to wear sandals and the walk across South Campus becomes nearly unbearable. Not because it reaches hell-freezing temperatures, but because of the unbearable smell that seems, incidentally, to coincide with the changing of seasons at Pacific. That's right, I'm talking about the California Sex Trees. If you have ever been lucky enough to walk across South Campus or been near the mailing station early in the morning, then you are probably quite familiar with the horror it wreaks upon your nostrils. If roses are the lovely inviting scent of the Gods used to bring you closer so you can admire their delicately constructed petals, then these trees are the exact opposite.

I first noticed this phenomenon as I was walking along the path towards the Classroom buildings, mingling my own business, until my senses were full-on assaulted by the pungent smell of semen. It was like there was bad sex all around me, and there wasn't anything I could do about it. I'm sure all of you know what it's like to walk into your room after your roommate has engaged in "relations," there's always that split second where you wonder, "Did someone go swimming? It smells like chlorine in here..." and then the awful moment of realization kicks in and you utter as you leave the room, "Oh goddammit." Dear Mr. Gardener Man, if you planted these trees of ass around campus, I hate you. And I hate your ass face too.

Speaking of ass faces, Kevin Federline, better known as Mr. Britney Spears, has decided to pursue a career in rap. Earlier this week, some tracks were leaked from his upcoming album, "The Truth," onto the internet. You know, I've always been a little bit skeptical, but I decided that I wouldn't judge until I heard some of his tracks. Some sample lyrics from the leaked tracks: "Back then, they called me K-Fed, but you can call me Daddy instead." I...see. Ok, let me get this straight... back then they called you K-Fed, but...you want to be called Daddy now? Wait what? Let's be real, you were the only one calling yourself K-Fed, please don't be one of those guys. Secondly, I must ask, back when? As I recall, Mr. Federline's crowning achievement before leeching off of Britney Spears was impersonating some washed-out actress. Ok, maybe I'm just jumping the gun here, let's observe some more of this hot fire that K-Fed spits: "People always asking me when's the release date? Well, baby you can call and see, until then all these Pavarottis followin' me." Well, I would be scared too if I had overweight tenors stalking me, even though I think he meant to say paparazzi.

My prediction is his new CD will fuse together two drifting genres, country and rap, to form a genre so great that the music world will be turned upside down. That genre will be simply known as "Crap." I thank you Kevin Federline, from the deepest depths of my heart for making this world a better place, one step at a time.

In other news, parents apparently have nothing to do at all because there has been an uproar over simple T-shirts that their kids are wearing. This T-shirt is supposedly so offensive, that clothing outlets are pulling them off the shelves because they promote rampant drug usage. The T-shirt in question? A simple black plain tee with a snowman on the front. Parents are complaining that kids are wearing it to brag about the fact that they deal cocaine. If parents are going to get mad that kids are wearing shirts that brag about dealing cocaine, how about addressing the fact that, oh you know, they deal cocaine? Next thing you know, Pac-Man will be outlawed because he runs around eating little white pills, or maybe Mario will be banned because he eats mushrooms and hallucinates about shooting fireballs and has an imaginary dinosaur friend. What is this world coming to.

The problem with Adderall is that there are too many students taking the medication who aren't prescribed the drug. Students get Adderall from their friends at school. Adderall isn't just an epidemic locally, but it's also major concern throughout universities nationwide. According to the Johns Hopkins Newsletter, over 20 percent of college students are using Adderall illegally and dangerously.

Adderall allows the mind to focus and balance itself for people with ADD and ADHD, because it balances a neurotransmitter imbalance deficiency. For a student or anyone who does not have this disorder, that imbalance is canceled out. As a consequence, Adderall use results in serious side effects.

One common side effect for those who do not have ADD or ADHD is addiction. Abusers of the drug are addicted to the energy it gives them. The drug can also cause dizziness, cotton mouth, suppressed appetite, high anxiety, diarrhea, impotence, weight loss, hives, mental disturbances, insomnia, and an increase in blood pressure.

Twenty years ago Adderall was first designed as a weight loss medication. In 1996 the...

FDA (Food and Drug Administration) approved and prescribed Adderall to treat those with ADD and ADHD. Dosages vary in the medication; one pill can be ten milligrams, while another can be thirty milligrams. College students taking the drug often times don't realize or ignore the dosage. "I tend to like the ten milligram pill better because it isn't as intense as opposed to the time-release pill" says a prescribed business international student.

Adderall is a drug that should not be mixed with other drugs. Doctors say never take Adderall within fourteen days of taking an antidepressant (Prozac, Nardil, Paroxetine) because a user's blood pressure will increase.

For students who think they might be suffering from ADD or ADHD, it would be wise to check with a local psychologist or psychiatrist. Since there is such widespread abuse of Adderall, in order to get a prescription a student must be documented with medical records. Psychologists and psychiatrists can determine ADD or ADHD symptoms through an administered test and a comprehensive evaluation.

NFL Guru Week 10 Predictions

Chase Topallo
NFL Guru

Overall Record: 39-24

San Francisco at Chicago
The Chicago Bears are 5-3 for one reason, their defense. They have been holding opponents to only 12 points per game while only scoring 17 points on offense. Kyle Orton does not have great numbers, but he has been making few mistakes the last few weeks. The 49ers played a good three quarters against a very good Giants team last week. I really think that they have a realistic chance of winning this game because of their defense. If the offense can finally get a TD they could pull this one out. I am going to pick the Bears because they are at home and have a good running game.

Bears 17, 49ers 12

Denver at Oakland
Once again the Raiders played well, but Larry Johnson scored a game winning TD with time running out. Jerry Porter has established himself as the receiver everyone thought he would be and LaMont Jordan is becoming a huge threat. The Raiders need to play better defense if they want to win more games. Denver is coming off a bye week and have gone 6-2 this season. They have a two-headed monster on the ground with Mike Anderson and Tatum Bell, who both rushed for over 100 yards in week 8. Jake Plummer has looked very good lately and he should have another good game.

Broncos 27, Oakland 20

Washington at Tampa Bay
The Redskins had a huge win over the TO-less Eagles. Mark Brunell was effective once again and Clinton Portis got in the end zone. The defense looks excellent because Lavar Arrington is finally getting some playing time. I never thought Brian Griese was such a huge difference, but it seems obvious that he is. Cadillac Williams has had two terrible games in a row and Joey Galloway has been the only bright spot. Their defense is still solid, but Washington should win.

Redskins 24, Bucs 17

Kansas City at Buffalo
The Chiefs snuck by last week and they were very lucky to do so. Larry Johnson is a star and Trent Green is starting to come around. The biggest worry for me is that Tony Gonzalez has been such a little part of the offense. The defense has been giving up way too many points after the transactions they made in the off-season. Buffalo is coming off a bye week after a loss to the Patriots. Willis McGahee looked very impressive and should continue to do so in this game. The Bills defense is very good also. The Bills are at home and coming off a bye.

Bills 28, Chiefs 24

St. Louis at Seattle
The Rams have been fighting injuries to Isaac Bruce, Torry Holt, and Marc Bulger over the last few weeks. Jaime Martin has been a pleasant surprise. They have been running the ball more with Mike Martz off the sidelines. Steven Jackson has been on fire the last month and has helped the Rams win through injuries. Seattle is the best team in the division and their offense is the reason why. Shaun Alexander is unbelievable and Matt Hasselbeck has been very efficient. The Seahawks will win because they are unbeatable at home.

Seahawks 31, Rams 20

Baltimore at Jacksonville
Baltimore's offense has looked dismal this season. Their defense has been looking better, but it has not been enough to make up for the awful offense. Jamal Lewis is averaging only three yards per carry and Anthony Wright is not a starting QB. Jacksonville seems to play very well against good teams and play down to bad opponents. All around they are a solid team that could be playoff bound if they do not get hit with injuries. Fred Taylor has been playing well and has not been injured seriously all season. The Jaguars are at home and should beat a team that is not as good as they are.

Jaguars 17, Ravens 13

Dallas at Philadelphia
The Cowboys got a much needed bye week so Julius Jones had time to come back. Marion Barber did a good job in his place, but he is not as good as Jones. Drew Bledsoe has thrown a TD in every game and Terry Glenn seems to look like a rookie again. The defense has been playing well and their rookies have been a big factor. The Eagles are the NFL's soap opera where Terrell Owens has been booted for the season. He apologized to the team, coaches, and owners but it seems like it is too little, too late. Reggie Brown had a solid game in his place with a 56-yard TD. The Eagles really need to get the TO situation out of their head if they want to make the playoffs. I don't know why, but I am going to pick the Eagles even without TO.

The Pacific Athletic Department has announced a new student ticket policy for the 2005-06 men’s basketball season. All students must pick up a ticket in advance of the game. Tickets will be available beginning on Monday on the week of the game. Tickets can be picked up at the Pacific Box Office at Long Theatre and on Thursdays at the McCaffrey Center during the Pacific hour. The Pacific Box Office is open Monday-Friday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Student tickets not picked up by Noon on game day for weekday games and on Friday for Saturday games will become available for sale to the general public. Student tickets are free to Pacific students with Valid ID. A total of 550 student tickets will be available for students in the Tiger Pit Student Sections which is located behind the team bench in the lower bleachers (Sections T, U, W and 104). Some additional seating will also be available for students in the upper bleachers.

In most cases students can pick up two games at a time with the exception of the games that fall during the winter break. For games contested during the winter break, student seating will be limited to sections T & U.

Listed below is the 2005-2006 home schedule and the dates that tickets are available to be picked up.

*Note: standing on seats is not allowed and may result in removal from the section; however standing at your seat is encouraged.

Pacific Records Win

Media Relations.

Santa Barbara, Calif. - The No. 9 ranked Pacific Tigers men's water polo team recorded their first Mountain Pacific Sports Federation victory of the year, downing No. 14 UCSB 6-5. With the win, the Tigers run their record to 15-9 on the season, 1-3 in MPSF play.

The Tigers outscored the Gauchos 4-0 in the first half, and held a 6-1 lead entering the final period of play. UCSB responded with five goals in the period, but Pacific continued attacking and was able to but one more goal on the scoreboard to record the 6-5 victory.

Sophomore Dragan Bakič led the Tigers with three goals, while junior Matt Turnbull had two in the winning effort. Senior goalkeeper Marko Popović also had a strong showing, recording 12 saves in the game.

"Getting this win puts us in the driver's seat (for making the conference tournament)," Pacific head coach Mike Maroney said.

Pacific has a four game home stand next weekend, Nov. 12-13, to close out the 2005 home campaign, including games against No. 8 Long Beach State and No. 1 USC.

Pacific Basketball kicks off season

What are the Tigers up to this season?

There was a lot of activity at the Alex G. Spanos on Saturday night. It was opening night for both the women's and men's basketball teams. In their exhibition games, the women defeated Cal State Monterey Bay, but the men fell to Seattle Pacific University in overtime.

The women beat CSUMB 82-61 and were lead by senior center Tina Sanerivi with 18 points. After a slow start, the Tigers executed their offense under the guide of sophomore point guard Kelsey Lavender. Lavender finished with 14 points and three assists. Junior guard Jerise Freeman tightened up the Tiger's on the defensive end by posting eight steals and 14 points.

The second half the tigers came out energized and dominated the game, inside and out. It was a group effort, for every Tiger that stepped foot onto the court. Senior forward Carolina Ruiz said, "I am excited that we started off the season on the right foot. I'm looking forward to see what this team can do!"

The men, however, did not have such luck. The two-time defending Big West Champions lost 72-71 in overtime to SWU. Senior forward Christian Maraker lead the Tigers with 21 points and 12 rebounds. Senior guard Johnny Gray added 15 points and 5 rebounds, that was not enough.

With 9 seconds left in the game, Maraker tied the game 60-60 by hitting a free-throw. Freshman Steffan Johnson nailed a 3-pointer and scored a lay-up after stealing the ball towards the end of overtime. With 25 seconds remaining, the Tigers were up by 1 but Seattle scored a lay-up, which gave the men only 4 seconds left to get a shot up but it was not enough.

Luckily for the men, this was only an exhibition game and it will not count towards the Tigers record, which will be good when March Madness rolls around and the brackets are done.

The Tigers are in action again on Friday, October 11. It's another double header night with the women playing San Francisco State at 5 and the men taking on Cal State Stanislaus at 7:30 in Alex G. Spanos Center.

Miguel Flores and Christian Maraker show their hops as they get up above the rim.
