Health and Welfare; Acquired Immunity Deficiency Syndrome—emergency measures

NEV. REV. STAT. §§ 209.511, 441.210 (amended).
SB 501 (Mello); 1987 STAT. Ch 622

Existing law permits limited disclosure of the name or address of a diseased person¹ to certain health officers or departments.² Chapter 622 expands existing law to allow disclosures of named persons diagnosed as having acquired immune deficiency syndrome and who are receiving assistance as medical indigents to the Welfare Division of the Department of Human Resources (Welfare Division).³

Under existing law when offenders are released from prison, the director of the facility: (1) May furnish the prisoner with up to $100; (2) must give notice to the prisoner of the provisions forbidding possession of concealable weapons and those relating to registration and fingerprinting; (3) may furnish suitable clothing; and (4) may furnish the cost of transportation to a residence or place of conviction anywhere in the United States.⁴ Chapter 622 mandates that the offender submit to a test for exposure to the human immunodeficiency virus.⁵
