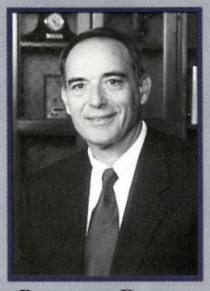
President's Perspective



President DeRosa

For the first time, the Pacific Review includes "Giving to the University of the Pacific," a testament to more than 8,000 alumni and friends of the University who have contributed to UOP over the past year. Some people say an honor roll of donors is interesting only to the person looking for his or her name. In fact, it is much more than a list of names, as the stories about some of the donors point out. These are people who have made a commitment to higher education at Pacific by making it possible for future students to attend and flourish.

Scholarship support through donations is the lifeblood of the University. Like the country's other leading independent universities, UOP supplies need-based and merit scholarships to over half of its students. We want a Pacific education to be affordable for as many top students as possible, and we are doing just that. This year the entering freshman class had an average combined SAT score 107 points above the national average, and an average GPA of 3.41. Twenty-one members of the entering class were high school valedictorians, a record for Pacific, and over half were in honor societies and/or took advanced placement courses.

The strategic use of scholarships has helped us create a vibrant, diverse, high-achieving student body. With enthusiastic scholarship support, we can assist more needy and meritorious students who see Pacific's blend of liberal arts and professional education as their choice for a university education.

The presidential campaign has generated talk of the importance of financial assistance for higher education. There is a consensus that it is vital for our country to increase the number of college-educated citizens. Research conclusively demonstrates the financial benefits that come to students who earn undergraduate and graduate degrees. We believe the strength and reputation of UOP enhances those benefits, so that Pacific graduates will be able to rely on their degree to advance their professional and personal pursuits. Contributors to UOP play a big role in maintaining the University's standing as one of the nation's best comprehensive universities.

Right now on campus, a very important process is helping to ensure that our academic quality is sustained. Over the next few months, we will review about 45 percent of our academic programs. The programs under review could be strengthened, combined or eliminated depending on what the campus community helps decide.

The review process will eventually involve all of the University's academic and nonacademic programs, with the ultimate goal of keeping Pacific forward-thinking and financially strong. Top universities across the country are engaged in the same process, as we all prepare to compete and better serve our students in the 21st century.

Provost Philip Gilbertson is leading the program review process, which is very interactive, including open forums, outside consultants and an appeal process for program leaders. No current student will be kept from completing his or her major or program of study as a result of the program review process.

In April, after hearing the recommendations of all the advisory bodies and participants in the process, I will make the final decision on program review, in consultation with the Board of Regents. As difficult as this kind of self-scrutiny is, I am convinced that program review will make Pacific stronger and more appealing to students past, present and in the future. UOP has attributes that set it apart from many schools: liberal arts linked with professional schools, a picturesque residential setting for students, campuses in three dynamic Northern California cities. We have worked hard the past year defining our mission as a student-centered learning institution. I am confident we can and will build on what makes Pacific special and create a University primed for excellence heading into the next century.

UOP art professor's work featured on magazine cover

Art Professor Gil Dellinger had a painting featured on the cover of the October issue of American Artist.

Several of his paintings were also reproduced in a full-color eight-page layout inside the magazine, which included a profile of the artist and the techniques he uses.

Dellinger is a pastel artist. He has taught at UOP for 22 years, and received the Distinguished Faculty Award in 1990 for professional contributions and teaching excellence. In 1995, he received an Eberhardt Teacher-Scholar Award.

Some of Dellinger's work appeared in the spring 1996 issue of Pacific Review.

Athletic Director search begun; Spiro named interim AD

Cindy Spiro, who has been assistant athletic director at University of the Pacific since 1994, will serve as interim athletic director during a national search for someone to fill the position vacated by Bob Lee in September.

Spiro is a 1976 graduate of UOP in physical education; she also holds a master's degree from Pacific. She was captain of Pacific's first varsity women's basketball team with the advent of Title IX in 1975-76. She coordinated women's athletics from 1979-81, where she organized some of the first tournaments held at UOP for women's volleyball and softball. She was chair of Pacific's Athletic Hall of Fame committee from 1990-94.

"Our goal is to continue our program operations and make the transition to a new athletic director as smooth as possible," Spiro said.

Engineering launches degree program with CSU Stanislaus

UOP announced a joint engineering program with CSU Stanislaus Oct. 29 that will enable students to receive degrees from both institutions.

Students would attend CSUS majoring in math or science for three years, then transfer to UOP. At Pacific, students would complete a senior year and earn a CSUS bachelor's degree in their major. They then continue at the School of Engineering for another two years, completing two co-op internships, to earn a second degree in engineering.

"This is a win-win situation for the students," said School of Engineering Dean Ashland Brown. "Very few other engineering students will be able to compete with these students, who will have two degrees and paid co-op experience. It's a unique opportunity."

Students will pay CSUS fees for the first three years of the program, changing to the UOP tuition structure the second three years. A January Term course at CSUS taught by engineering Professor Gary Litton will launch the partnership.

Equal opportunity activist speaks at COP event

Urban consultant and equal opportunity activist Aileen Hernandez talked to freshman mentor classes this fall about her experiences as a young African American woman at Howard University in the 1950s.

In her talk at College of the Pacific's Fall Convocation, Hernandez challenged the Class of 2000 to "make the 21st century one of true equal opportunity."

Hernandez recalled her first visit to Howard University with her father in the late 1940s. They arrived by train from New York. "Washington D.C., our nation's capitol, was the point where the country became segregated, if you were arriving by public transportation," she said.

Her father tried to hail a taxi, but none would move forward. So he stepped back and asked a driver if he would please give them a ride to Howard University. "The driver said we would have to take a black cab. To show you how naïve I was, coming from Brooklyn, N.Y., to the segregated South, I thought he meant the color of the cab," said Hernandez.

Hernandez also spoke to several classes at UOP about her career the day following convocation.

Dentistry Dean Dugoni receives ADA's highest honor

Dr. Arthur Dugoni, dean of the School of Dentistry, received the American Dental Association's highest honor when he was awarded the Pierre Fauchard Academy Gold Medal in September.

The former ADA and California Dental Association president and 1948 graduate of the dentistry school was recognized for his "outstanding contributions to the art and science of dentistry and service to the profession" at the ADA's annual meeting held in Orlando.

Dugoni was nominated for the award by past recipients of the Gold Medal, which was approved by a two-thirds vote of the ADA's board of trustees.

Dugoni has served the ADA on its House of Delegates for more than 20 years. He is treasurer for the FDI World Dental Federation, is a past president of the American Association of Dental Schools and still maintains a private orthodontic practice in San Francisco. Pierre Fauchard is considered "the father of modern dentistry."

Hanyak wins COP award

Robert Hanyak, a professor of communicative disorders and '81 UOP graduate, received the Faye and Alex Spanos Distinguished Teaching Award during College of the Pacific's Fall Convocation in September.

Hanyak has been a professor at UOP since 1985. He is chair of the communicative disorders department, teaching courses in speech and language pathology. After graduating from UOP, he earned a master's degree in audiology from the University of Utah in Salt Lake City. He is currently working toward a doctorate in education at Pacific.

During Hanyak's tenure at UOP, the communicative disorders department has grown substantially, from 35 students a decade ago, to 80 undergraduates and 40 graduate students today. Since undergoing a remodeling two years ago, the department, which includes the Speech, Hearing and Language Center, has more speech and therapy rooms for client consultation than any university clinic in California.

Hanyak was nominated for the award by students and fellow faculty members. President Donald DeRosa and Provost Philip Gilbertson made the presentation. DeRosa said Hanyak "translates ideas into actions, academic reflection into professional behavior."

Hanyak will follow COP tradition and give the keynote address at Spring Convocation.

Regents approve construction of new aquatics center

The Board of Regents approved the construction of a 4,000-square-foot swimming center adjacent to Chris Kjeldsen Pool at its regular fall meeting. The cost of the facility will be between $425,000 and $500,000. Construction should begin this winter.

The new center will equip the aquatics facility with showers, locker rooms, offices and display space to showcase trophies and awards won by Pacific swimmers and water polo players. In addition, spectator seating will be redesigned and the surrounding area will be landscaped.

More than $300,000 in cash contributions are in place to fund the center. Some additional money has been pledged, and the University plans to continue fund-raising efforts for the center as it is built.

Stalin's interpreter tells stories of brutal Soviet empire

Valentin Berezhkov translated for Soviet dictator Joseph Stalin when he spoke with heads of state like Adolph Hitler, Franklin Roosevelt and Winston Churchill. Berezhkov spoke in Faye Spanos Concert Hall Oct. 3 about his experiences.

The fact that he is alive to talk about his work with Stalin is part of the story. "I felt I would be exterminated," he told the audience, "because I knew too much." Berezhkov said Stalin was an actor and could play "an affable, modest, even common man," but was in reality "an insatiable monster" who regarded his people as fools. He admired Stalin and was terrified by him.

Berezhkov, now a professor at Pomona College, has written numerous books, including his most recent, "At Stalin's Side." His talk was sponsored by the School of International Studies.

Fulbright awards celebrated at Tuesday World Forum

Jody Olsen, executive director of the Council of International Exchange of Scholars, the administrative arm of the Fulbright Fellowships, was on campus to meet with faculty and students and to offer her perspective of "Fulbright at 50: Major Influence for Peace with an Uncertain Future" at Tuesday World Forum Oct. 29.

Tuesday World Forum is a weekly lecture series sponsored by the Office of International Programs and other campus organizations.

A reception hosted by President Donald DeRosa and Provost Philip Gilbertson after the talk honored more than 20 of Pacific's and the Northern San Joaquin Valley's Fulbright scholars.

Physical therapy chair wins award for longtime service

Physical therapy department Chair Carolyn Hultgren received the Charles Magistro Service Award at the annual state conference of the American Physical Therapy Association in October.

Hultgren has served in many administrative positions for the California association and in Oklahoma and New Jersey chapters. She has also served the national association in many capacities. She has received all the awards the California association can give as recognition for leadership, service and governance.

'Flubber' film crew rolls in for 1 day of shooting

UOP was the site of movie location shooting for a second time this year when a crew making the Walt Disney film "Flubber," starring Robin Williams, came to campus in November.

The production used about 25 to 30 UOP students, who tried to walk to class at mythical Medfield College while Williams' stunt double shot by on a motor scooter.

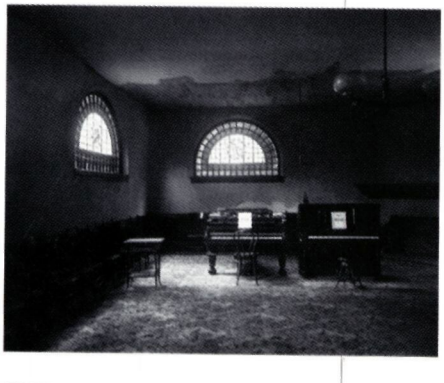
The bulk of the movie is being shot at Treasure Island outside San Francisco. Williams himself did not come to UOP to act in any scenes.

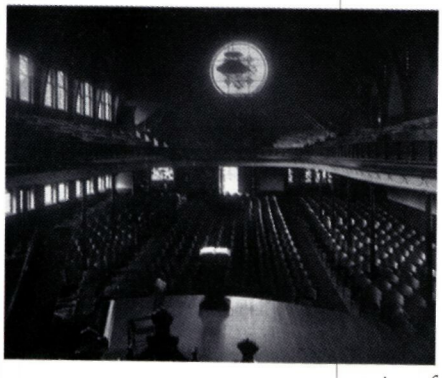
In June, the coming-of-age drama "Inventing the Abbotts," starring Liv Tyler and Joaquin Phoenix, did location shooting at Pacific.

HOWARD HANSON

The Conservatory's most famous dean remembered

This year is the centenary of Howard Hanson's birth. Winner of the 1921 Prix de Rome and the 1944 Pulitzer prize, Hanson is acknowledged as one of America's foremost 20th century composers, in the same company as Aaron Copland and Charles Ives. Although Hanson is often identified with work he accomplished during more than 40 years at the Eastman School of Music, the composer also spent five years – two of them as dean – at the Conservatory of Music, then in San Jose. He returned in 1978 to Pacific to conduct at an event in Faye Spanos Concert Hall celebrating the Conservatory's 100th anniversary. This fall, the Conservatory returned the favor, holding a concert commemorating the music and life of Howard Hanson, who died 15 years ago.





Hansen taught and led performances in the concert hall and recital room of the old Conservatory in San Jose, above. His gaunt frame is in evidence in the top photo from his first days on campus.

In 1916, College of the Pacific President John Lawrence Seaton hired the 19-year-old Hanson to head the music theory department while Hanson was still a teaching assistant at Northwestern University. At that time Pacific was in dire financial circumstances, having lost two important buildings – the dining hall and the library – to arson fires over the prior two years. The college was without significant fiscal endowment and Seaton, who had been hired in 1914 on his reputation as a fund-raiser, was obliged, from the moment he assumed office, to dig out of a deep financial hole.

Seaton and Hanson perceived an opportunity not to be passed by in Hanson coming to the College of the Pacific. Seaton stood to gain in hiring a talented, though inexperienced, musician at a salary he could afford to pay. For his part, Hanson seems not to have been in very good health. Photos in the University Archives show him to have been a very gangly youth – slim to the point of emaciation – and both men expressed concern in their correspondence for the composer's health. In addition to California sun, Seaton offered Hanson the opportunity to build his own orchestra. Because Conservatory Dean Warren Allen was a choral conductor and the string teacher was a chamber music devotee, the 70-student Conservatory had no large instrumental ensemble.

The earliest correspondence between the two men, in February 1916, touches on this and other aspects of Hanson's possible work at the Pacific Conservatory. Seaton wrote, "If you conducted an orchestra how much instruction would you be able to give the players on instruments other than the cello? I very much desire that the man who comes should take charge of the orchestra and after the first few weeks have it on duty regularly at the College assembly and other special occasions." Seaton also hoped to spread Hanson's talents in other directions: "It would be of advantage to us if you would specify a little more fully how much work in Public School Music you have taken ... The Public School Music (major) seems likely to be an important feature of our work in the future." Hanson later asked permission to teach a course in the physics of sound and Seaton granted this request. For all of these endeavors President Seaton suggested a teaching load of 25 hours a week and a salary of $1,200 per year.

Hanson responded in the affirmative to all requests and offers and soon the President sent a contract. In his covering letter, Seaton apologized for the contract's morality clause, noting that although he had met the young man and knew that he neither drank nor smoked, "in a few instances we have had very great embarrassment from the unsuitable conduct of some of our teachers. In one instance the evidence of actual immorality, besides drunkenness ... (which is) wholly undesirable in an institution of this kind ... "

With the contract behind them, the two men focused on a new aspect of their association, one which would dominate their correspondence for the next two years. Apparently, Seaton had an intuitive regard for the 19-year-old Hanson's ability to size up the talents and cultivate the friendship of other musicians, for even before the younger man had taught so much as an hour at Pacific, the President began to use him as a recruiting officer for new faculty. On May 25, Seaton wrote, "I should like to secure a man who was a good singer and whom was attractive in his personality. If, in addition, he had executive and business ability, it would be very desirable ... If you should know such a jewel as I have indicated I should be glad to have you ask him to write to me immediately." In response to this request, Hanson hired Charles Dennis, who later replaced Hanson when Hanson, who was named dean in 1919, departed for Rome in the fall of 1921. Dennis served as acting dean until Hanson officially moved to Eastman in 1924, at which time Dennis became dean in his own right until 1930.

Soon after arriving in San Jose, Howard Hanson began to make his presence known. As requested, the young theory teacher organized an orchestra and had it up and running by mid-October 1916. The Pacific Weekly noted "this year's orchestra is rapidly proving itself to be the best musical organization developed at Pacific in years ... The number of players has increased steadily until there are now 22 people turning out for Wednesday night rehearsals." Although the instrumentation of this group left something to be desired, consisting as it did, of 10 violins and one cello, two flutes and three clarinets, two cornets, a mellophone, two trombones, a tuba and supporting keyboards, the College was duly proud to have joined the ranks of "many of the larger colleges and universities (which) during the past two years have realized the importance of a symphony orchestra."

Hanson also introduced the campus to his own music with a performance of the "Prelude and Double Fugue" for two pianos on Sept. 19, 1916. Many more performances followed during the next few seasons, including premieres of the "Symphonic Rhapsody" (October 1919), "Four Songs" (February 1920) and the "Forest Play" (June 1920). He wrote frequently to President Seaton and to President Tully C. Knoles, who replaced Seaton in spring 1919, about works he was composing during his summer vacations. In one such note in July 1919, Hanson informs Knoles, "I am a little over halfway through a new sonata which I started on the train and it is one of the few things that I am really conceited about! Usually the ideal is so far ahead always that it spoils the realization of what I have completed but this time I am as proud of it as a Swedish Lutheran minister is of his confirmation class. The form is, I believe, 'absolutely original' ... as it is an attempt to put the emotional contents of an entire four movement sonata into one movement of considerable length. Also I believe that the material is the strongest that I have ever written, at least it seems to express more nearly what I am trying to say. Of course the 'shimmering' ideal flutters away off on the tops of the hills just moving a little further away when I reach and 'almost' (!) touch it ... "

Howard Hanson led the UOP symphony in a benefit concert in 1978 at the Conservatory of Music.

Hanson's efforts in this direction ultimately led his work to grander pastures than the Pacific Conservatory auditorium. In July 1920 the composer's "Forest Play" was described in Musical America. Hanson wrote to Knoles that he had "received numerous letters from other American composers and I believe that the Conservatory is receiving more and more recognition every day." At about this time the composer began planning a Festival of American Music to be held annually at Pacific. He wrote to President Knoles that someone had offered him the Los Angeles Philharmonic for this festival and that the correspondent who had interviewed him for Musical America had told him that, "it would be the finest kind of propaganda if we carried through the intention of making an American Music Festival." In the summer following the staging of this first Festival of American Music – during which the Los Angeles Philharmonic performed Hanson's "Symphonic Rhapsody" – the composer was able to write to President Knoles that he had had offers of performances from the New York Philharmonic and the Chicago Symphony. In November 1921 Howard Hanson became the first recipient of the American Prix de Rome and took an extended leave of absence from the College of the Pacific.

Although the now-renowned composer continued to correspond with Knoles about Conservatory matters and his European experiences (offering – among other things – excellent advice for the architects of Pacific's new Conservatory auditorium in Stockton), both men doubtless knew that Hanson would never return to Pacific. In July 1924 Hanson wrote Knoles that he had been appointed director of the Eastman School of Music. He expressed his exhilaration at being put at the head of an institution with 1,900 students and an endowment of $7 million, noting that "the opportunity for serving American art in such an institution is so tremendous that it is my obvious duty to accept the responsibility and throw my best into the work." Still, the young composer admitted that he much regretted "as a personal matter leaving the College of the Pacific ... (for I) was always very happy in my work there and ... shall always have a very warm spot in my heart for you and for Pacific."

CLASS-SIZE REDUCTIONS MEAN MORE STUDENT TEACHERS LEAD CLASSES THEMSELVES

There are exactly 20 kids in Dana Thong's first grade class at Elmwood Elementary on a hazy fall morning in Stockton. Thong, a Benerd School of Education graduate last spring, has been their teacher for exactly 32 days.

UOP intern Dana Thong

The two numbers are related. Twenty is the maximum number of students California elementary schools can have per class to qualify for new state funds promoting reduced class sizes. Thirty-two is the total number of days Thong, a student teacher pressed into service as a full-time teacher, has ever taught.

Because new, smaller classes have been created throughout California due to 1996 class-size reduction legislation, student teachers are in demand as they are asked to fill school districts' needs for full-time teachers. According to the Los Angeles Times, almost 22,000 additional teachers will be needed statewide to reach the 20-student limit in elementary-school classrooms.

Normally, student teachers are assisting a full-time teacher while earning a credential, hoping to get hired when they've completed the requirements. But with teachers in short supply, student teachers are now being hired as interns, or full-time teachers who are completing their credential work. In a typical semester, perhaps one student teacher from UOP would be hired by a school to intern. (This excludes UOP's music-education interns, who are usually more numerous because of a constant need for music teachers.) This fall, the number of interns is seven.

"I can't remember us ever having that many students intern," said School of Education Professor Susan Kyle, director of student teachers, interns and credentialing. "Class size reduction is having an impact. We've had lots of calls asking for information and clarification about our credential program."

For all newcomers to teaching, facing a room full of youngsters for the first time can be daunting. Claudia Schwartz, UOP's student teacher supervisor and a '73 alumna, said one of this year's 33 student teachers equated the experience to learning to swim – the hard way. "You're thrown in the water, and hopefully you learn to tread water, then maybe you learn to get somewhere."

UOP student teacher Terry Kayser, who is also head resident at Farley House, was faced with 14 Cambodian students her first day this fall at Wilson Elementary in Stockton. "They smiled at me, and I'm wondering – can they speak English? But it turned out only two or three of them couldn't understand," she said. Lynn Vasquez, who is currently student teaching at Kohl Elementary in Stockton, said, "I chose to leap into the fire and create some new lessons right away. It didn't take long before I thought, 'Oh my God, this is way too complex for them.'"

Thong remembers her first-day thoughts quite well. "I was really overwhelmed," she said. "You ask yourself, 'What do I do all day? How do I know I'm teaching the right stuff?' I was excited and scared, but I knew I had a lot of help, too."

In fact, UOP's interns and student teachers go to their jobs with a solid support system. Schwartz visits student teachers every week, interns every other week. Kyle leads a mandatory weekly seminar for student teachers where they discuss tough situations that come up in the classroom. The School of Education works closely with teachers and administrators at schools where students are placed; last year, a $60,000 state grant to UOP was renewed that provides training for teachers and administrators in how best to utilize student teachers.

It also helps student teachers that the surrounding school districts are filled with UOP graduates. Thong as well as several other interns and student teachers are working at schools that have teachers as well as principals who attended UOP.

The public's perception of teacher training is often akin to on-the-job training, that the real education of a teacher begins in front of his or her first class. "We do believe that you learn on the job, but we don't want you to invent the wheel on the job," Kyle said. "There is a lot of specialized knowledge learned in education classes."

Jason Messer, Education '92, principal of Brookside Elementary in Stockton, said he hired a current UOP intern, Rebecca Pratt, over some veteran teachers in part because she was well-versed in two areas: evaluating students without using letter grades and dealing with student conflicts. "It's important not just to have experience, but also to have knowledge," he said.

Messer added, however, that Pratt had another quality that can't be learned. "She had enthusiasm," he said. John Semillo, principal of Elmwood Elementary in Stockton, found the same quality in Thong. "After 10 minutes of talking to her I knew I wanted her for our staff," he said. "She had that presence and enthusiasm that makes a good teacher."

"UOP people seem to have self-confidence that they can accept new challenges. They're not afraid to get involved right away," said Schwartz. "Maybe a little of it is due to the small classes at UOP – they build strong relationships with faculty that build confidence."

In Thong's first-grade class, strong teacher-pupil relationships are easier because of the small class size. On one sunny October day, her 20 students spend the late morning counting out addition and subtraction problems on their fingers, occasionally staring at the paper pumpkin cutouts on the wall they made during crafts.

Thong is balancing her time between a couple of children who are struggling with the arithmetic and a little girl who has already finished the work. Thong tells the class that the girl, "is all done with her math and doesn't have any homework." The girl basks in the attention while a hush falls over the class. Then Thong says it's time for lunch and the students line up at the door.

Like most classes, Thong's includes students that learn at differing paces. She tries to give each student some individual attention, particularly when she has a teacher's aide in the room, but she knows many activities will be done as a group, and the fewer the students, the more manageable the activity. The smaller class size also helps out in preparing materials and grading assignments – the walls of Thong's classroom are adorned with art projects, grammar papers and other materials from every student.

UOP intern Dana Thong reads to her first grade class at Elmwood Elementary in Stockton.

Thong hopes she can become acquainted with all her students' families before the end of the school year, either by home visits or teacher conferences. She knows it could be a formidable task, but with only 20 students, it feels manageable.

"Primary schools across the state routinely had classes of 30 students and above," said Kyle. "There's a big difference between what you can do with 30 students and 20 students. Our student teachers and interns saw the larger classes when they were doing observations, and now they're working in the smaller classes. They can appreciate the difference."

Naturally, students enjoy the greater attention and closeness with a teacher that a smaller classroom brings. Thong, who is Cambodian, said her ethnicity is particularly interesting to her class, which is roughly half Caucasian and half Hispanic. "They ask a lot of questions about me, which I don't mind, like, 'What languages do you speak?' When my family came to the school to visit, I spoke Cambodian to them, and the class certainly pricked up their ears at that."

Whether reducing class sizes, and thereby employing less experienced teachers, is a good idea or not, the process will have one welcome result: It will give schools a jolt of youthful idealism. "I tutored my little brothers in English, I volunteered in schools that had other Cambodian immigrants like me," Thong said. "I want to be a teacher to contribute something to society."

PACIFIC PARTNERS

Professors like teaching on the same campus with their spouses

McGeorge School of Law Professors Jed "Skip" Scully and Glendalee "Glee" Garfield met at a conference in Santa Clara. She was running the clinical program at McGeorge and he held the same position at Loyola University in Los Angeles.

The two became closer when they collaborated on a case before the California Supreme Court. They worked around the clock and Scully finally said, "Look, would you marry me?" Her response: "I think you're very tired." But they've been collaborating on cases ever since, and she said, "it's one of the most gratifying things about working at the same school."

The couple married in 1979 and Skip Scully left a lifetime of professional relationships in Los Angeles to move to Sacramento. Glee Scully had children in high school and they decided not to move the kids. Their plan was that he would come north for a year, and then they would all move south. "By the end of that year, I was the man who came to dinner," Skip said, "and I never finished dessert."

UOP has about 20 professor couples, many in the same discipline. The advantages of working together seem to outweigh the disadvantages. Husband and wife are on the same campus, can collaborate on projects and are equally caught up in the life of the University. Several couples said they enjoy seeing their students participate in activities and are big supporters of Tiger athletic teams. "We moved closer to the campus so we could attend more events," said Madhu Chaubal, who teaches in the School of Pharmacy, while his wife Kishori teaches in College of the Pacific. Engineering Professors Ken Hughes and Louise Stark are big sports fans. Ken manages World Wide Web pages for several of the teams and has autographed team photos on the walls of his office in Anderson Hall.

Photography Professor Dan Kasser and his wife, Lucinda, a professor of painting, also attend musical events at the Conservatory as do Kishori and Madhu Chaubal and Jean and Charlie Matuszak, chemistry professors in pharmacy and COP, respectively.

Frank and Lynelle Wiens teach in the Conservatory of Music; he is chair of the applied music department and professor of piano and she teaches voice. "We started dating in 1980 and married in 1982," said Frank. "In between those years we served together on the appropriately named Academic Affairs Committee."

The Wiens' studios adjoin each other in Buck Hall. "If one of us has a quick crisis or something to share, it only takes a few steps to be with each other," he said. Best of all, they understand completely about the demands of the other's profession. "We have the same friends and professional interests and most of the same calendar obligations," Lynelle said. "We also share the same vacation schedule."

Unfortunately, that's not the case for Kishori and Madhu Chaubal or Jean and Charlie Matuszak. Jean and Madhu teach in the School of Pharmacy, which is on the three-semester system. Kishori teaches biology and Charlie is a chemistry professor. "We only have 15 days of summer vacation, the first two weeks of August, that is the same," Madhu said.

The Matuszaks and Chaubals often teach the same students, however, with one spouse seeing them in biology or chemistry in pre-pharmacy classes while the other spouse teaches them a few years later. Jean Matuszak and Madhu Chaubal both teach medicinal chemistry. Madhu taught Kishori when she was working on her Pharm D. degree. He doesn't recall any favoritism in class. He finds it ironic that she worked for her pharmacy degree because she couldn't find a position in microbiology, but once she had the advanced degree, she found a biology teaching position at College of the Pacific.

Louise Stark and Ken Hughes teach in the computer and electrical engineering department in the School of Engineering. She was the first woman engineering professor at UOP and began teaching in 1992. Ken came with Louise to Stockton from University of South Florida, where they both received their doctorates. Almost immediately, he was asked to teach a few classes at Pacific. Both are now assistant professors.

Hughes and Stark enjoy collaborating, often going to the same conferences and conventions. Stark's virtual reality camera fits inside Hughes' robot. Rivalries among Pacific's faculty couples seem non-existent – supporting each other is the order of the day.

"One of the funny things about being married here and having different last names is that students don't always know we're married," Hughes said. "On occasion, one of us will have a couple students in our office and one will begin talking about Professor Hughes or Professor Stark. The other will elbow him in the ribs and whisper 'They're married.'"

The name thing is a little different for Lucinda and Dan Kasser, who both teach in the art and art history department. Often the department secretary is faced with a new student who is looking for Professor Kasser, and the registrar will attribute classes taken to the other Professor Kasser. "Students are intrigued by our relationship," said Lucinda. "I think they like seeing that a husband and wife can work well together."

That comes, she said, from having the same ideals and goals since they met in college in New Mexico. Dan was the first to work at UOP, taking a position as professor of photography in 1984. Lucinda finished her graduate work at CSU Sacramento and began teaching classes in the art department. "She started teaching art education courses, the job no one wanted at the time," Dan said.

He is proud that his wife has also moved into department administration and is serving her first three-year term as chair. Philosophical education issues and institutional pedagogy engage them both. "We have very interesting dialogues about education and art," Lucinda said.

The love of teaching is the common ground for School of Dentistry professors Eugene Santucci and his wife, Noelle Fanucci. Both retain private practices, but they stay fresh working with students and like the change of scenery. "It expands me intellectually," Fanucci said. "It gets you out of the four walls of the dental office," Santucci agreed. "No matter how bad the week is going, I'm always up on Friday when I teach. The camaraderie is wonderful. I've gained greatly from teaching."

Both Fanucci and Santucci received master's degrees through the school's program with the Benerd School of Education. They feel their teaching careers have led to mutual growth. They collaborate in professional activities, like the Matuszaks and Scullys and Hughes and Stark, and they like talking to outside groups.

"It's an enormous advantage to share the same workplace," Glee Scully said. "We take great pleasure in each other's company."

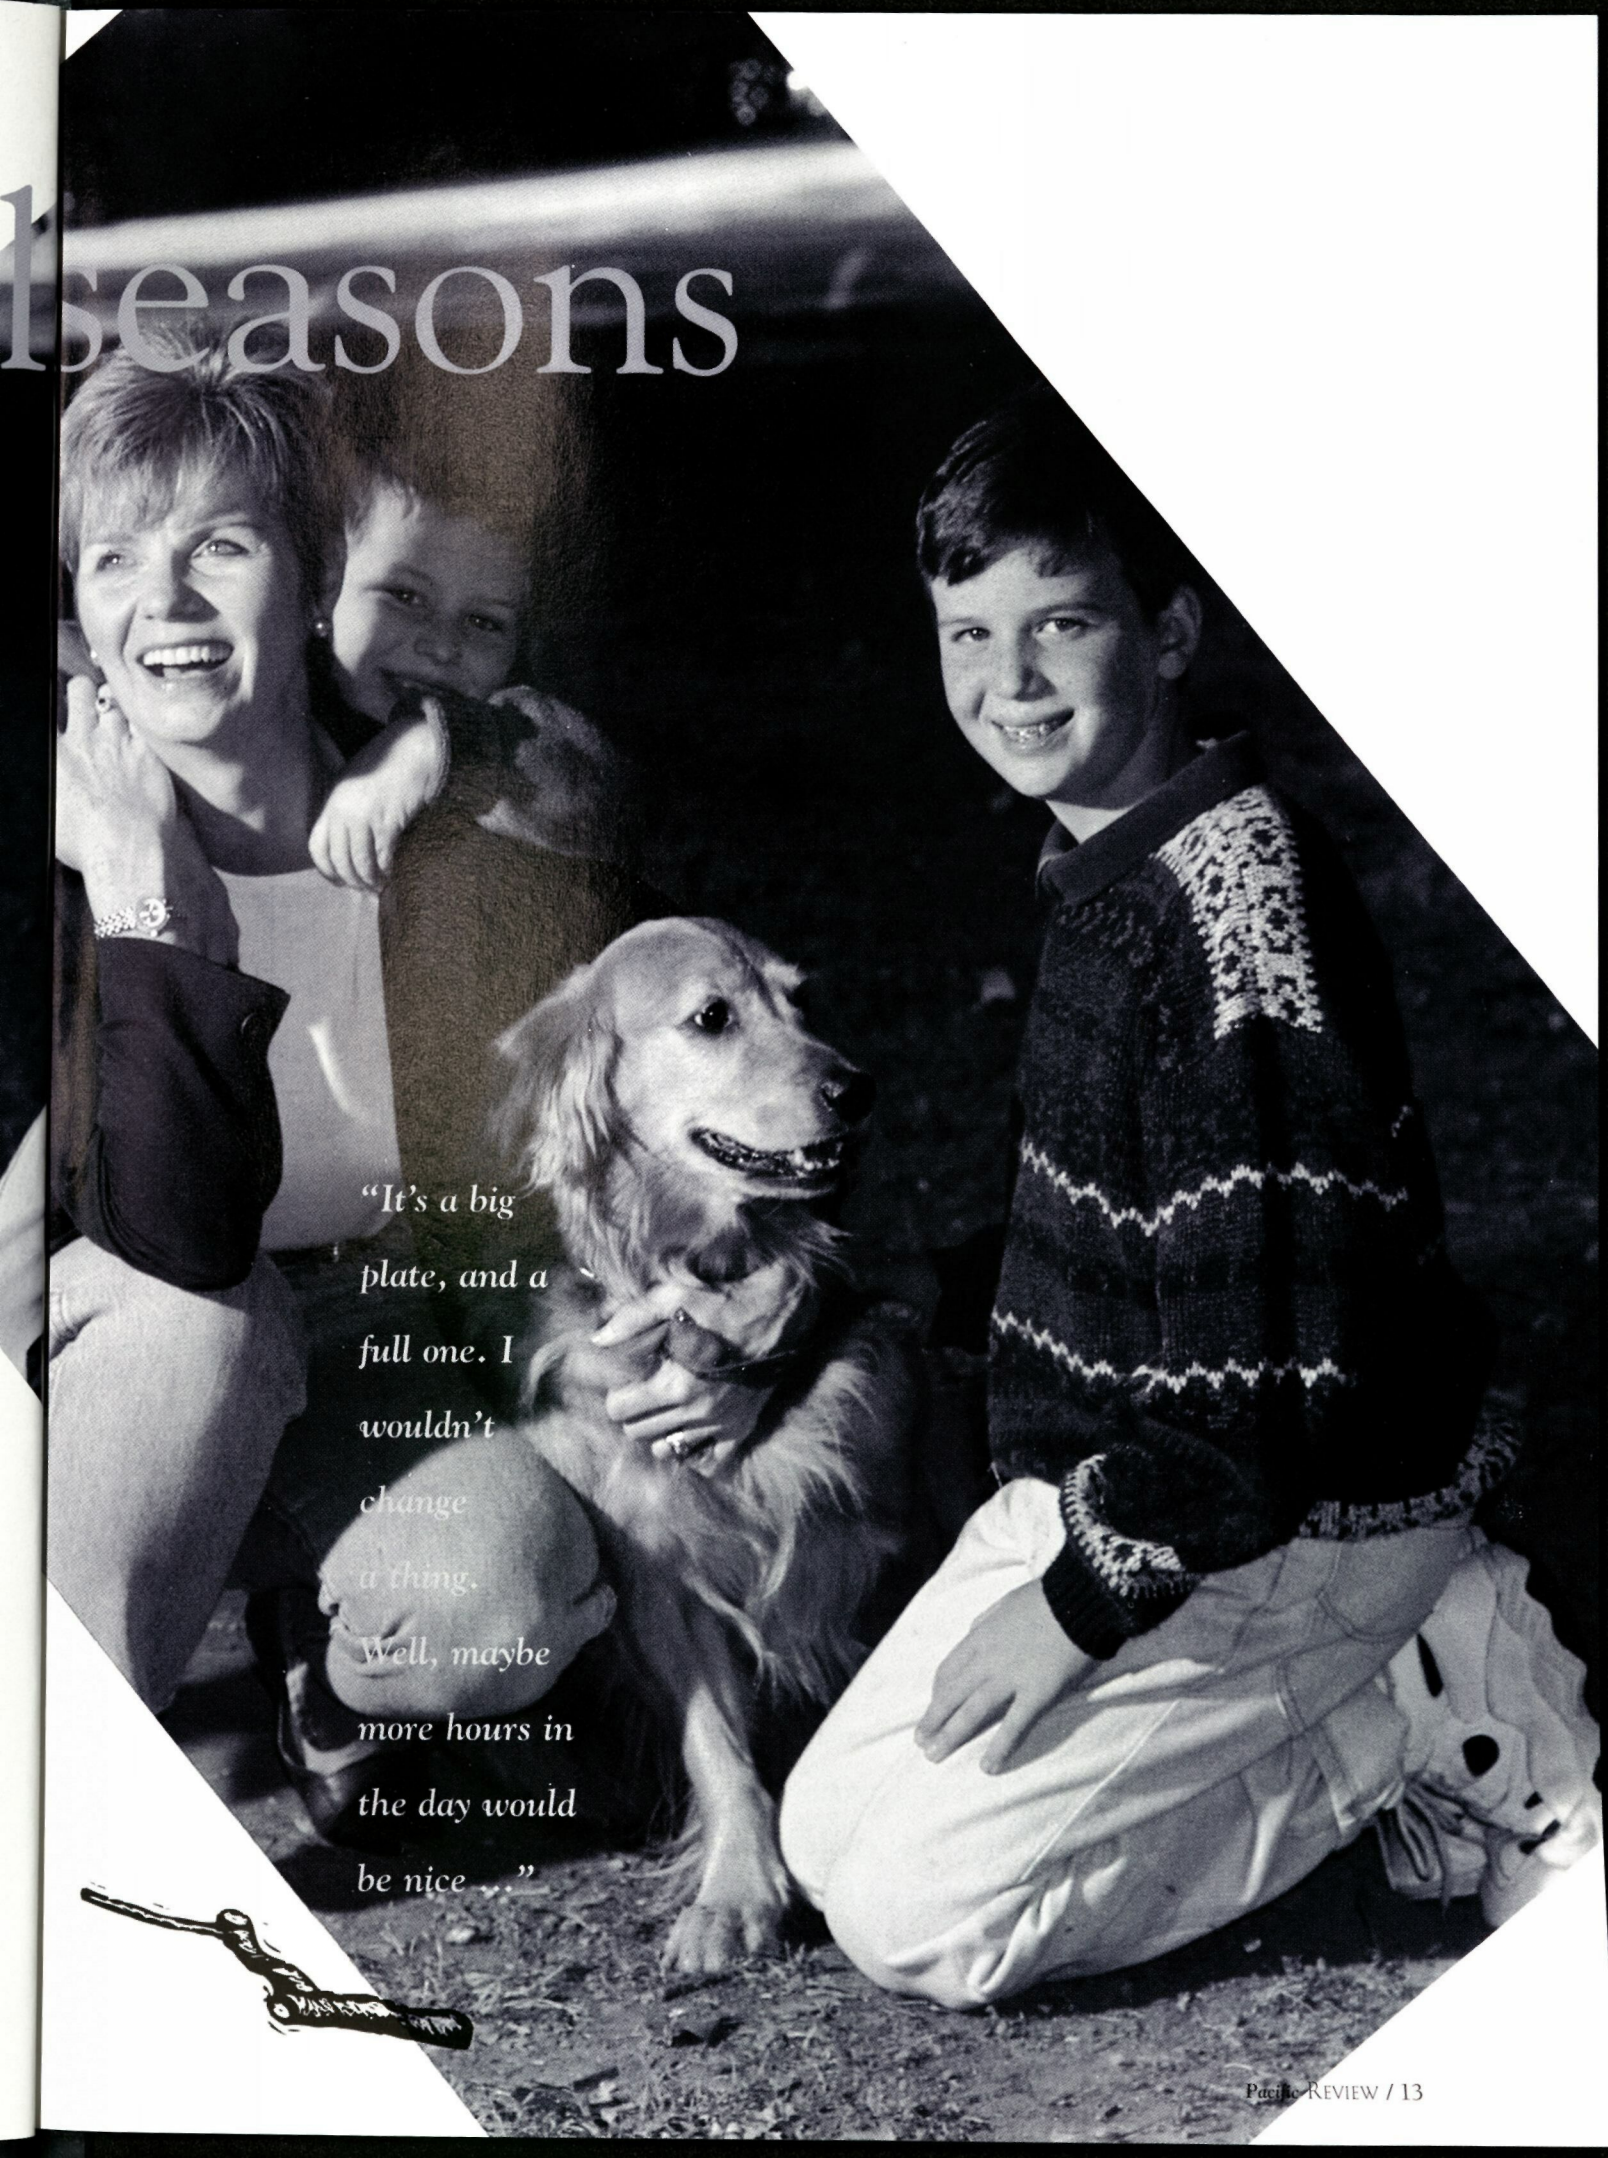
Woman for al

Pacific's first lady, Karen DeRosa, juggles her many duties well

Karen DeRosa is like many mothers with young boys. She drives a mini-van, spends a good part of her life watching basketball practices and tennis lessons and volunteers in classrooms every week.



seasons
"It's a big plate, and a full one. I wouldn't change a thing. Well, maybe more hours in the day would be nice . . ."

"Being a step-parent has given me a unique role and I hope I've made an impact on their lives. You're not in love with (the children) when you get married, but you fall in love with them when you go through life with them, when you stick it out with them."

When Donald DeRosa became President of the University of the Pacific last year, the big house on President's Drive again became home to a young family, and the back garden has a basketball hoop, an in-ground trampoline and a lawn for romping with Jessie, the golden retriever, or a pick-up game of whiffle ball. While the yard layout is obviously made to accommodate the DeRosas' two boys, Michael, 10, and David, 5, the garden must serve a dual duty as a reception area. Five hundred students, alumni or parents can move easily between the house and yard, enjoying the fine afternoons and evenings by the Calaveras River.

The seamless binding of University and family flows through Karen DeRosa's days. She and her husband impart a warmth that is welcoming and inclusive. "It's a busy house," she said one warm morning this fall. People are around to take care of the yard, clean the pool, keep the house and, often, all the doors are flung open to receive guests for University functions. "With the kids, there's a lot going on. We live here, but it's still a very public house."

Evenings are filled with University obligations. "Luckily, I'm low maintenance," she said. "I can be ready in 20 minutes." She wears her hair in a short, easy style and has a girl-next-door warmth and vivacity coupled with an understated elegance. Sometimes, just the hint of a Southern lilt finds its way into her conversation, a leftover, perhaps, from the 10 years she spent in North Carolina when her husband was at the University of North Carolina in Greensboro.

Karen's upbringing in a little Ohio town was the basic training she received on her way to becoming the first lady at UOP. "I wish the world were the way it was when I was growing up. We had so much freedom to play, or just hop onto our bikes and go anywhere. I think it fostered independence and safe and secure feelings," she said.

She went to college right out of high school, and then moved to Colorado near relatives, where she worked as a secretary for a few years. She traveled in Europe for a summer and eventually returned to Bowling Green State University in Ohio, where she worked for a student personnel professor and student affairs administrator for six months. She decided to continue her education and since she needed a job while going to school, she spent three years as assistant director of the Commuter Center, a service and gathering area for commuting students. The director of the center became her mentor.

"She's the reason I went into student personnel. She pushed me into activities, into sitting on boards and into leadership roles. I received experiences that were as valuable as the ones in the classroom, and that led me to graduate school," she said.

Karen attended the University of Vermont in Burlington for her master's degree and then went back to her first professional job at Bowling Green, as assistant director of the Student Recreation Center, where she was responsible for personnel and some programming. "Two weeks into the job the man who hired me was fired and I became the main programmer for the center. I learned to adapt to change very quickly," she said. It was the early 1980s and her career made a serendipitous turn to join the movement into exercise and wellness. Soon, Karen was teaching an exercise class and jogging on the track. A jogging friend, the dean of the graduate school, introduced her to the chair of the psychology department, the man who would later be her husband. "We became good friends, running together, and then we went out, months later," she said.

"The last thing I would have anticipated was marrying a man with three children, who were definitely part of the package, and a dog, too! But it was great for me to come into marriage with a pre-teen and two teenagers who wouldn't eat anything green. I learned that they really do come out OK; now they put away their clothes and eat broccoli," she said, laughing.

Karen DeRosa addresses a group in the Bechtel International Center at a Women of the World meeting, right. Below, she and President DeRosa meet parents during Family Weekend. Below left, are Karen's extended family - Joe DeRosa, Carol DeRosa Farroch and Lauren DeRosa, with their grandmother, Jean DeRosa.

When Karen married Donald DeRosa, Lauren was 11, Carol was 15 and Joe was 16. They lived with their mother in Bowling Green and "we all worked hard to raise those kids together." Now Lauren is in graduate school, Carol was just married this fall and Joe works in a restaurant in Charlotte. All three had moved from Ohio to North Carolina while their dad was at University of North Carolina in Greensboro. Keeping up with the family on the East Coast is vitally important to the West Coast contingent.

"We try to talk at least once a week and stay in touch with our mothers and sisters as well. We don't want to let those parts of ourselves go," Karen said. It can be difficult coordinating time to talk, since the President's House is often buzzing between 6 and 9 p.m., the same time that the Eastern time zone is beginning to settle down, 9 p.m. to midnight.

"I'm surprised at how much effort it takes to keep up with everyone," she said, noting that her live-in sitter, an education student, has been very helpful. "Our lives are so seamless since she moved in. She knows the boys' schedule and just takes over when we go out. She's also made some nice connections with the older kids."

When the couple moved from Bowling Green to President DeRosa's new job as dean at UNCG, Karen was pregnant with Michael. Making her own way was important to her. "I wanted to work, to pursue things that interested me," while taking care of her small son. She thinks that experience, where she started her own business as a fitness consultant, has been a good basis for her life in Stockton. She had thought for awhile about going back to school for her doctorate in educational counseling, but David came along and her plans changed. "I don't know if I would do that now, although I might. There's a box in the attic that has a lot of my work from that time, and I don't feel I have to open that box again, but I may want to try something challenging and fun at some point. I am definitely challenged by what I am doing now, but if that were to change, I'd love to look at helping people deal with blending families, to be proactive, help anticipate stumbling blocks to help the kids and adults deal with their new lives."

She has started one new thing at UOP: piano lessons. "I always wanted to play piano and I said I would if I ever had a piano." The President's home is equipped with a lovely grand piano and Karen is taking lessons on campus. "It's really hard! It's like learning a new language, but I just adore it. It's a fun thing to do and I appreciate even more the talent and skill it takes to play the piano well." She has warm memories of her grandmother playing Christmas songs and everyone gathering around the piano to sing. Karen has "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" down rather well. "Everyone is pretty sick of it," she acknowledges, but adds wryly that she's ready for retirement parties. Michael and David will be taking lessons soon, too.

Like many married women, Karen's relationship with her husband fits into the warm places between duties to the children and her work. If she had a day to spend exactly as she wished, "I'd spend it alone with my husband, somewhere very peaceful with great food, music and books. It would be so nice to curl up and be there and not have to be anywhere, watch a funny movie and just enjoy being together. That's a rare occurrence," she said. She thinks for a moment and then she says, "And to know our kids are somewhere having a ball, just having a wonderful time! The one thing I'd love for them to model from us, is to have a happy relationship."

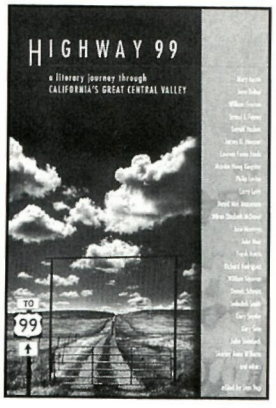
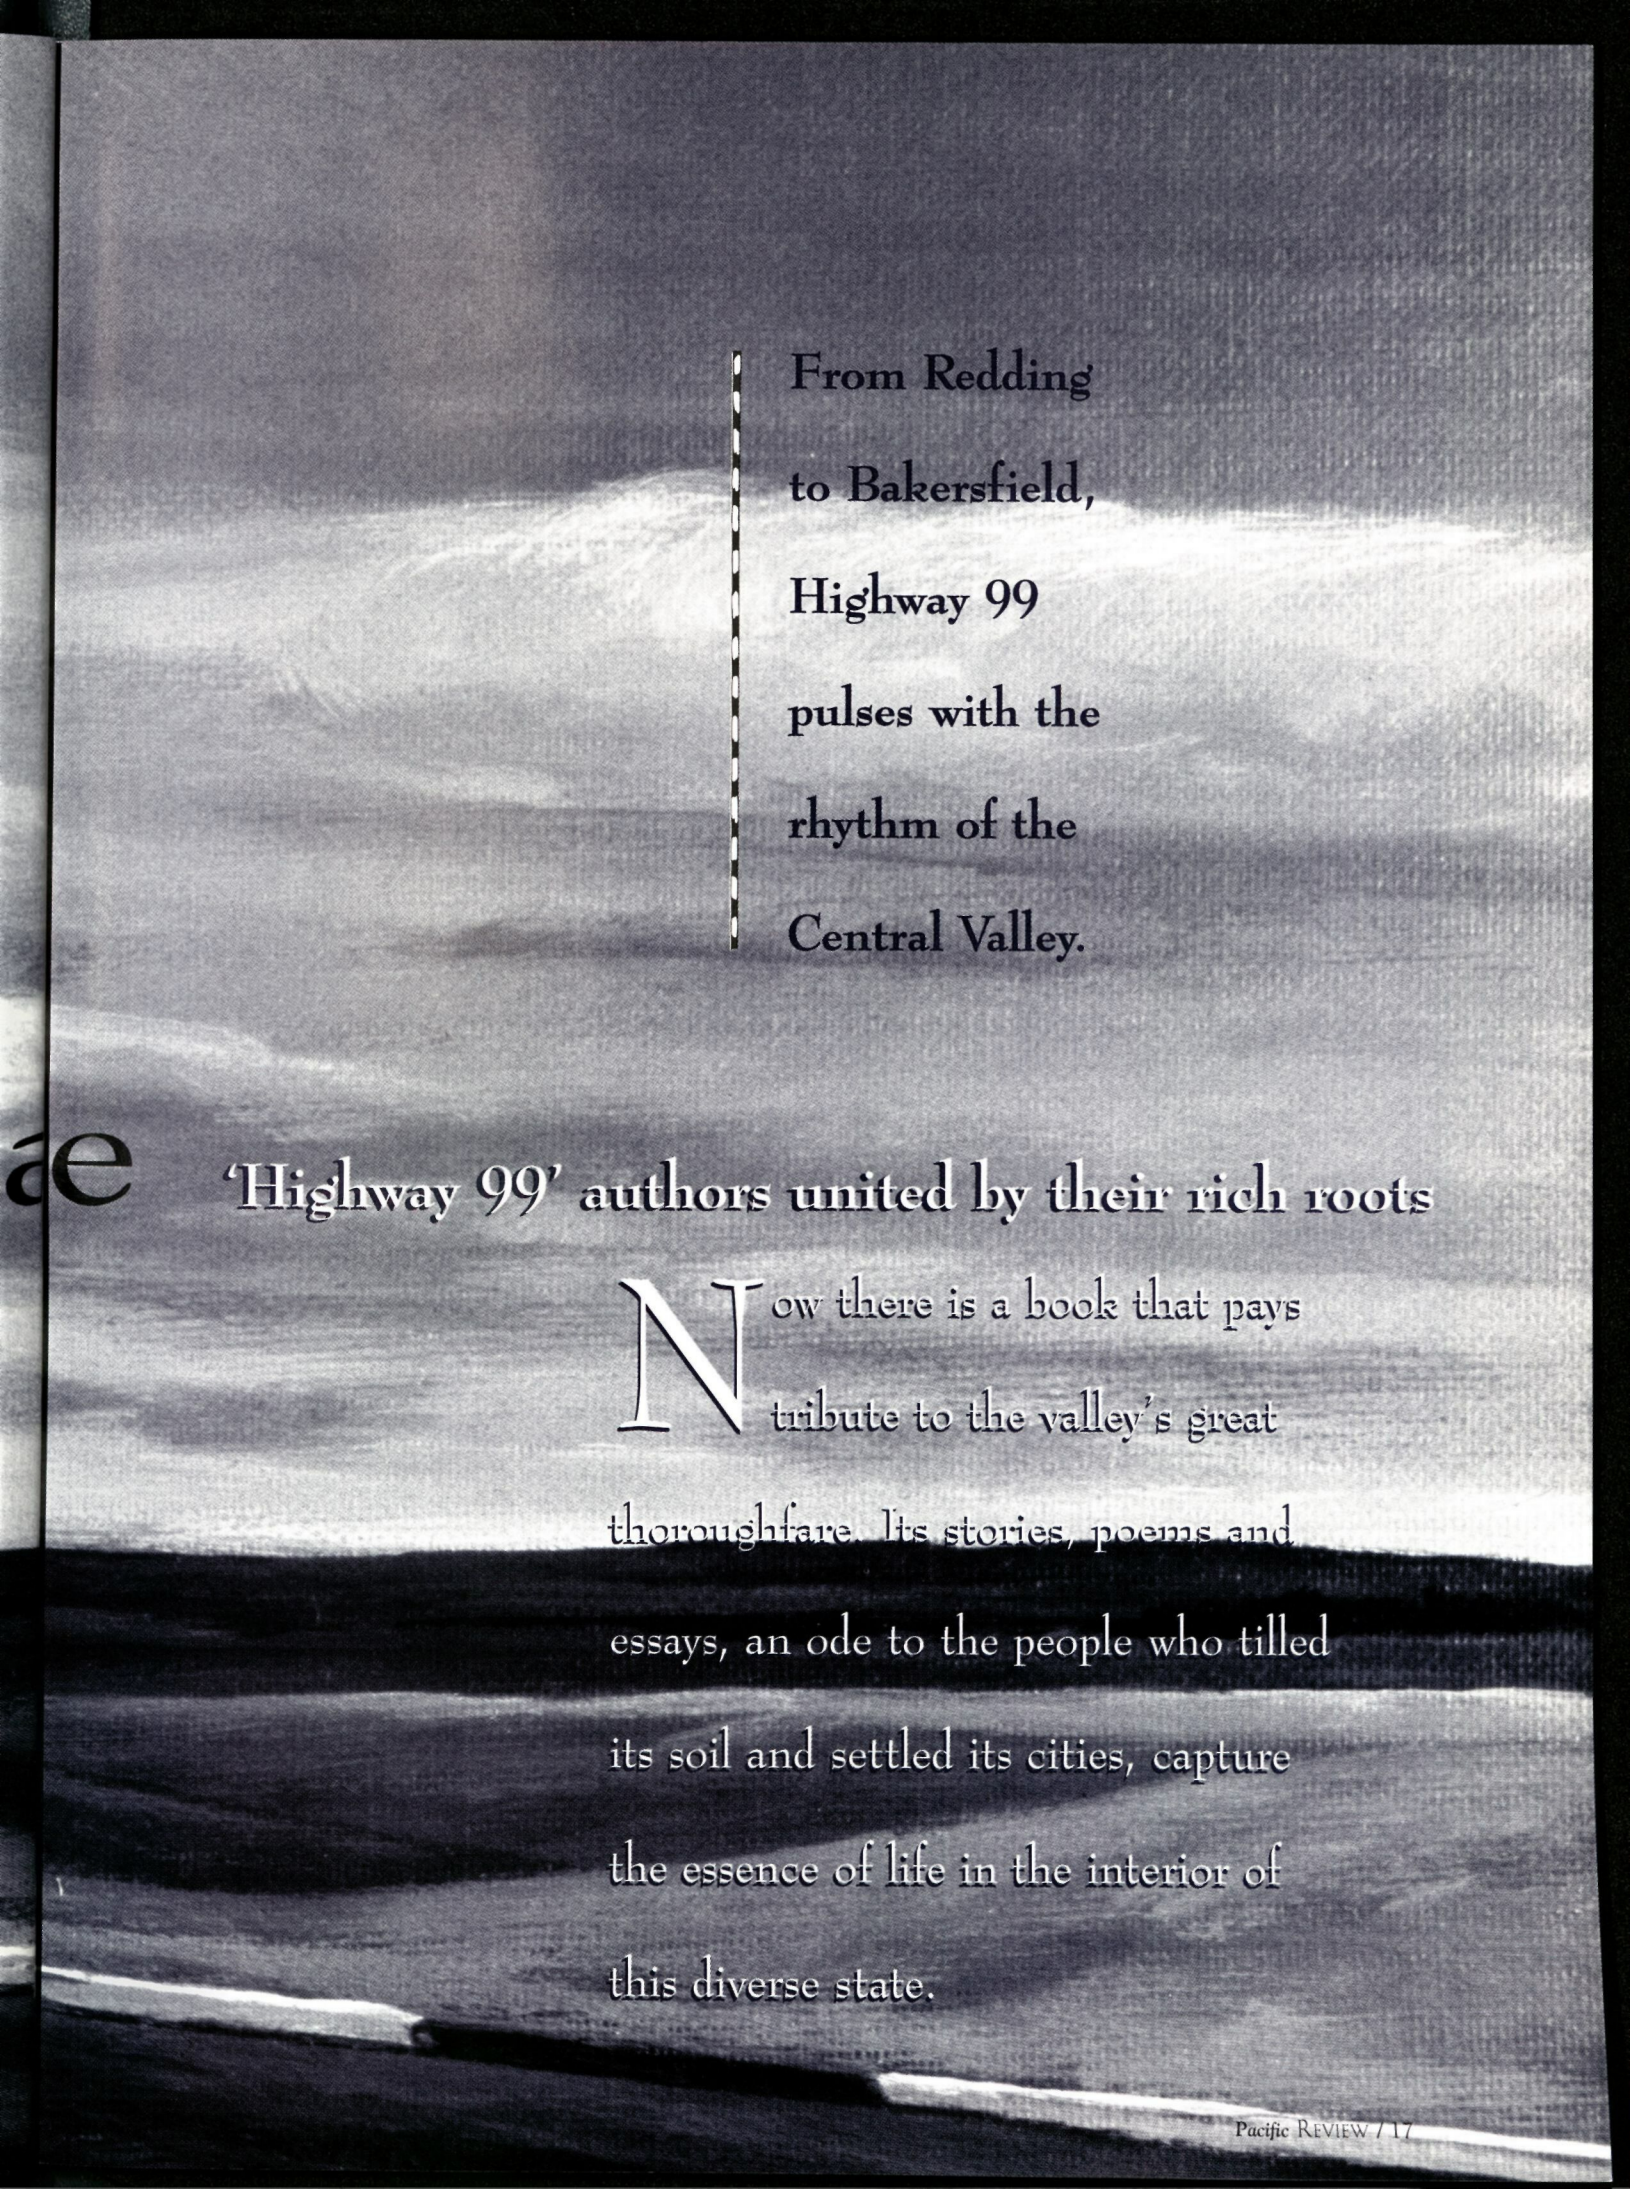
"They've (Michael and David) gotten smart now about which parties and receptions to attend. They peer out and ask themselves: 'Can we have fun with these people? Will they jump on the trampoline with us?'"

The valley's literary landsca

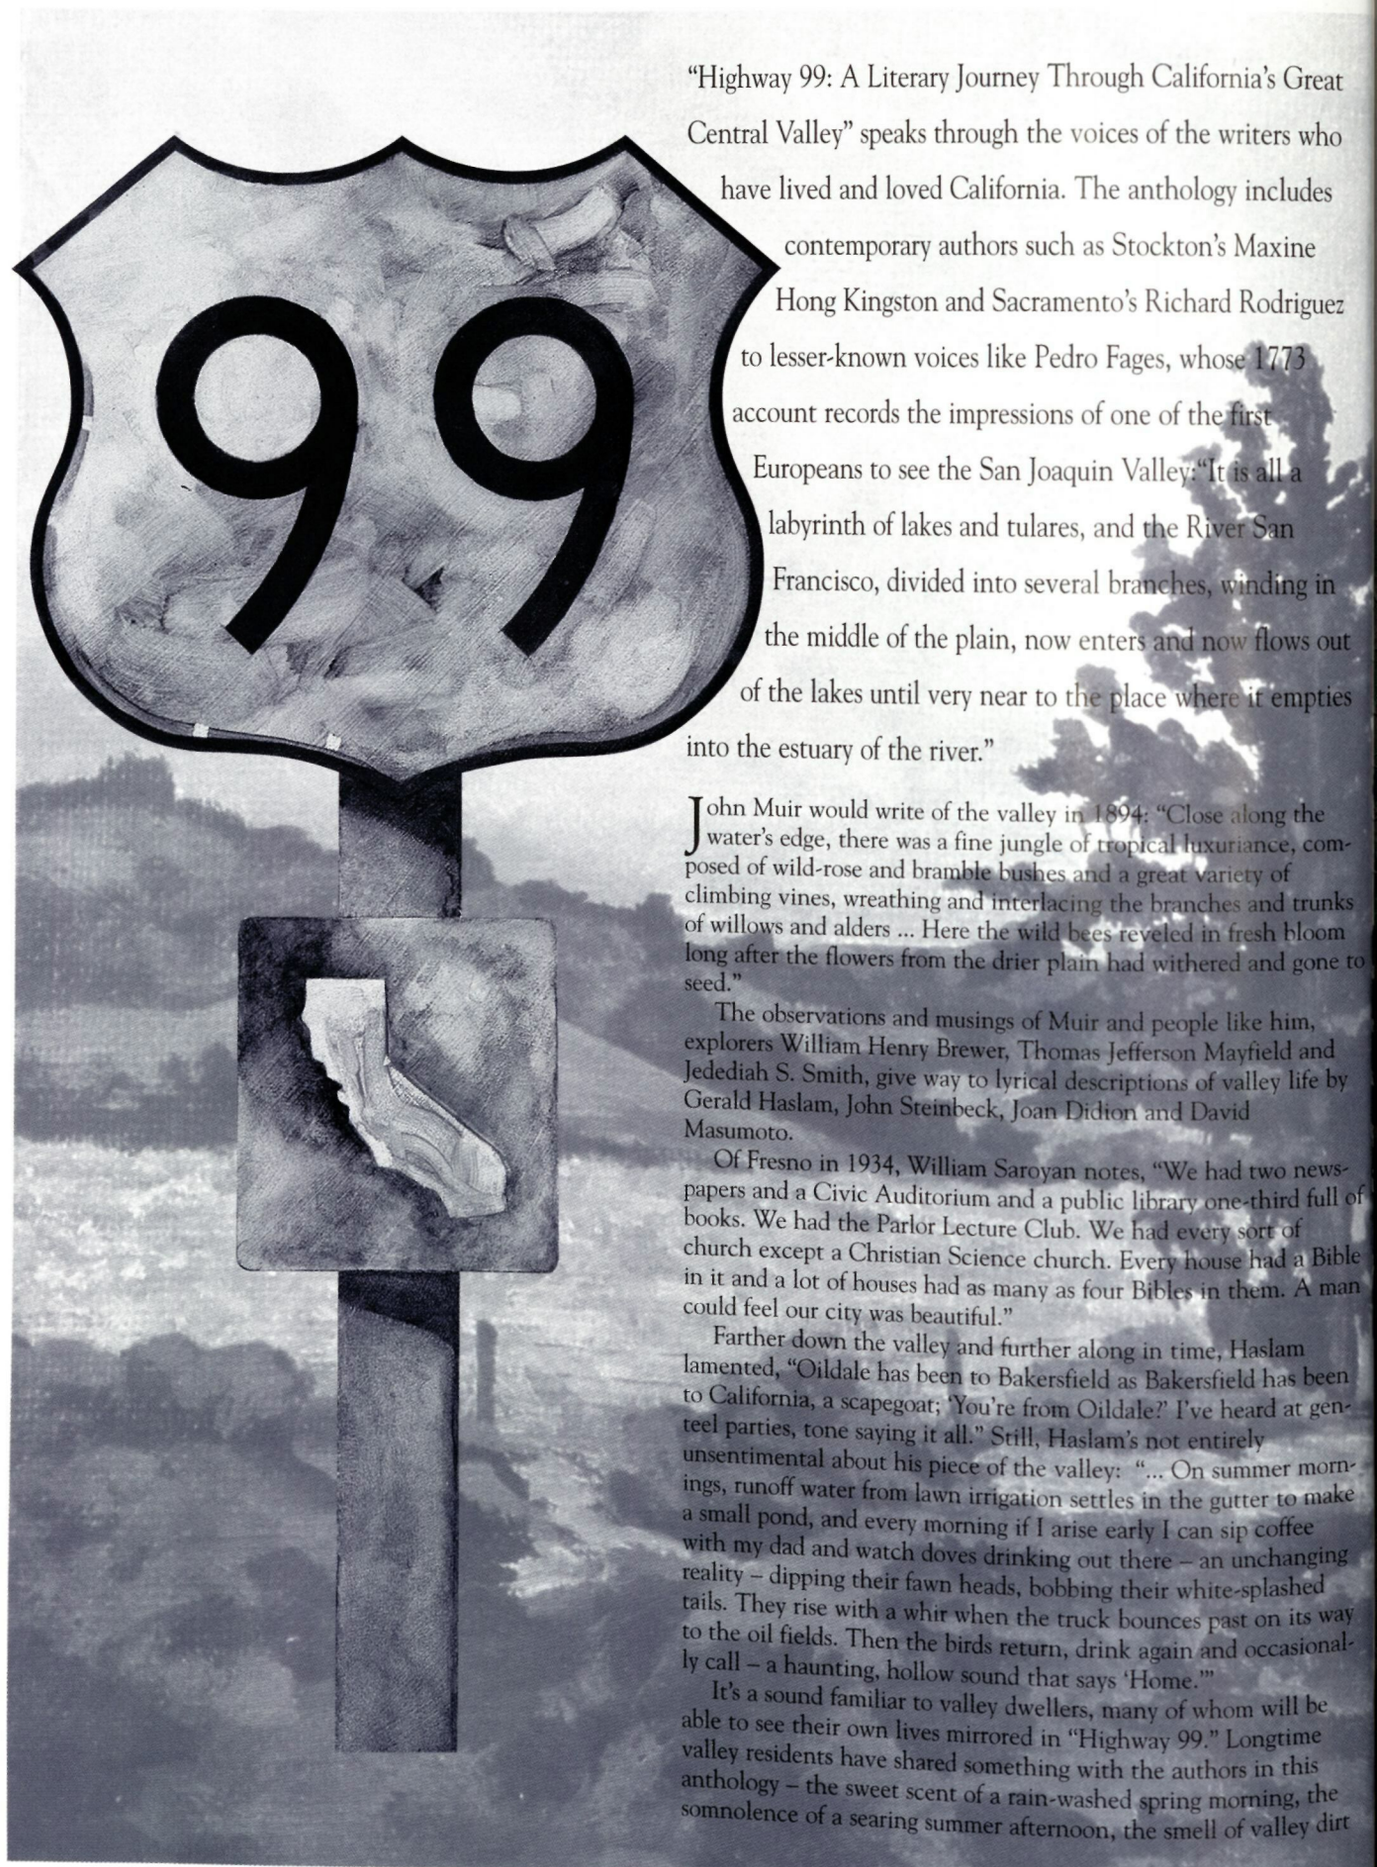




From Redding to Bakersfield, Highway 99 pulses with the rhythm of the Central Valley.

'Highway 99' authors united by their rich roots

Now there is a book that pays tribute to the valley's great thoroughfare. Its stories, poems and essays, an ode to the people who tilled its soil and settled its cities, capture the essence of life in the interior of this diverse state.



"Highway 99: A Literary Journey Through California's Great Central Valley" speaks through the voices of the writers who have lived and loved California. The anthology includes contemporary authors such as Stockton's Maxine Hong Kingston and Sacramento's Richard Rodriguez to lesser-known voices like Pedro Fages, whose 1773 account records the impressions of one of the first Europeans to see the San Joaquin Valley: "It is all a labyrinth of lakes and tulares, and the River San Francisco, divided into several branches, winding in the middle of the plain, now enters and now flows out of the lakes until very near to the place where it empties into the estuary of the river."

John Muir would write of the valley in 1894: "Close along the water's edge, there was a fine jungle of tropical luxuriance, composed of wild-rose and bramble bushes and a great variety of climbing vines, wreathing and interlacing the branches and trunks of willows and alders ... Here the wild bees reveled in fresh bloom long after the flowers from the drier plain had withered and gone to seed."

The observations and musings of Muir and people like him, explorers William Henry Brewer, Thomas Jefferson Mayfield and Jedediah S. Smith, give way to lyrical descriptions of valley life by Gerald Haslam, John Steinbeck, Joan Didion and David Masumoto.

Of Fresno in 1934, William Saroyan notes, "We had two newspapers and a Civic Auditorium and a public library one-third full of books. We had the Parlor Lecture Club. We had every sort of church except a Christian Science church. Every house had a Bible in it and a lot of houses had as many as four Bibles in them. A man could feel our city was beautiful."

Farther down the valley and further along in time, Haslam lamented, "Oildale has been to Bakersfield as Bakersfield has been to California, a scapegoat; 'You're from Oildale?' I've heard at genteel parties, tone saying it all." Still, Haslam's not entirely unsentimental about his piece of the valley: "... On summer mornings, runoff water from lawn irrigation settles in the gutter to make a small pond, and every morning if I arise early I can sip coffee with my dad and watch doves drinking out there – an unchanging reality – dipping their fawn heads, bobbing their white-splashed tails. They rise with a whir when the truck bounces past on its way to the oil fields. Then the birds return, drink again and occasionally call – a haunting, hollow sound that says 'Home.'"

It's a sound familiar to valley dwellers, many of whom will be able to see their own lives mirrored in "Highway 99." Longtime valley residents have shared something with the authors in this anthology – the sweet scent of a rain-washed spring morning, the somnolence of a searing summer afternoon, the smell of valley dirt after the harvest is done.

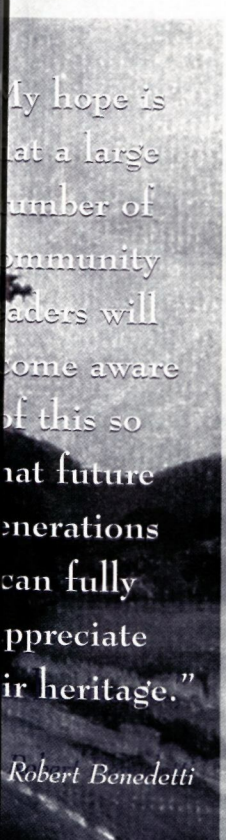
"People who live in the valley are people who have faced history and the elements without protection," said Robert Benedetti, dean of the College of the Pacific. "They are ordinary people through whom the universe passes."

Benedetti, who is chair of the California Council for the Humanities, the state affiliate of the National Endowment for the Humanities, said the Highway 99 Project was based on a pilot study conducted in Modesto and Visalia during the last five years.

The staff of the Council for Humanities took the idea of celebrating valley literature and built upon it to develop a book, lecture series and a reading and discussion group program that stretches from Bakersfield to Redding.

"We started out about three years ago and found there was a great deal of enthusiasm for the project," said Benedetti, noting that the project was originally conceived to include 10 major valley cities, but has grown as other cities have asked to become part of it.



For the Highway 99 Project is not only the book itself, but a series of lectures and discussion groups funded through the state council by the National Endowment for the Humanities.

Douglas Tedards, associate professor of English at UOP, is the teacher/scholar for the Stockton group, which has 27 participants and will meet monthly, except for December and January, to discuss the literature contained in "Highway 99." Tedards said topics for discussion will range from "Living and Working in the Valley," to "Social and Cultural Crossroads," to "Maxine Hong Kingston's Life and Work," in preparation for the author's April 5 lecture at Faye Spanos Concert Hall.

"What we feel like is that this project is truly a new journey up and down a very old highway," Tedards said. "It looks like an opportunity to expose a very wide segment of the population here to this literature." Tedards, whose specialty is modern and American contemporary literature, said the discussion group format suits his "pedagogical style," which tends more toward intellectual discourse than lecture.

Like Benedetti, Tedards is anxious to get the word out about the rich cultural heritage of the Central Valley. "I suspect that the Central Valley generally, and Stockton in particular, have suffered in comparison to the Bay Area, which has had a long and rich history of literature."

Benedetti said that the 1990s have been a general time for "coming out" in the valley, with the cultural split in California shifting over the years from a north/south split to an east/west split.

"My hope is that a large number of community leaders will become aware of this so that future generations can fully appreciate their heritage," Benedetti said. "People in the valley have always had the sense that their roots didn't matter, that they don't quite measure up. They do measure up."

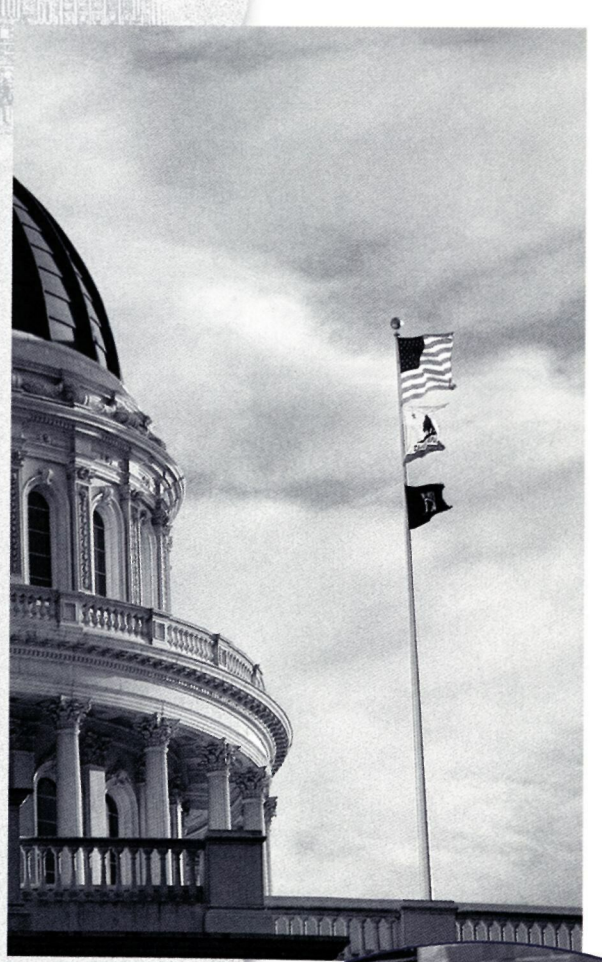
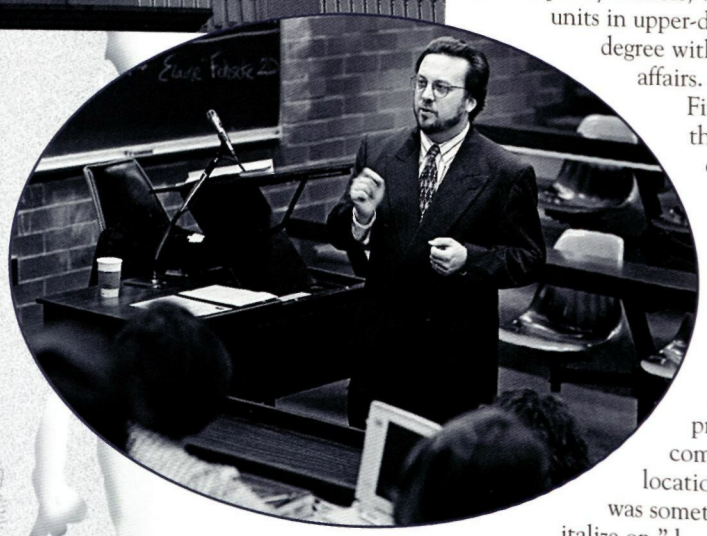
McGeorge's man at the Capitol

Dynamic professor connects law school with Legislature



McGeorge School of Law professor Clark Kelso was a familiar face in thousands of Northern California homes last year when he appeared on TV regularly as a legal expert to discuss the complexities of the O.J. Simpson trial. Now, he's becoming just as well-known among lawmakers and other government leaders in the State Capitol as he works with them to develop the law school's new Government Affairs Program and its Institute for Legislative Practice.



Kelso, 36, directs the program, which has moved McGeorge into the public policy arena by dealing with major political and legal issues that concern the Legislature and Gov. Pete Wilson. Now in its second year, the program provides an added dimension to the curriculum. Students gain experience in studying public policy matters, with the option of earning 16 units in upper-division classes leading to a J.D. degree with a certificate in governmental affairs.

Fifteen graduates were awarded the certificate last June at the end of the first year of Kelso's program, and the number enrolled this year has jumped to 65.

The program was launched in 1995 after a faculty committee headed by Professor Brian Landsberg endorsed it following a comprehensive study. Kelso said the committee felt the law school's location in California's capital city was something "McGeorge ought to capitalize on," by offering a program that could help bring about better government, better legislation and a more efficient court system.

The importance of adding a program that involves working with government institutions was seconded by McGeorge Dean Gerald Caplan.

"Lawyering today requires knowledge of legislative and administrative processes about equal to that of courtroom litigation," Caplan said. "We need to prepare students for careers in legislative advocacy, rule making, administrative adjudication and related public policy-making positions."

For Kelso, moving into the field of public policy has been a career goal since he graduated from Columbia Law School. He clerked for McGeorge Professor Anthony Kennedy prior to his appointment from the federal appellate court bench to a seat on the U.S. Supreme Court. He has also been a consultant for the California Judicial Council and a frequent contributor to law journals. He joined McGeorge's permanent faculty in 1987.

For Kelso, there are unusually strong family roots for a legal career. Both parents hold key positions at McGeorge. Charles Kelso, his father, is a contracts professor, and his mother, Jane Kelso, is dean of students. Two older brothers are in the legal profession, one with a San Francisco law firm, the other a law professor in Texas. On his father's side, seven successive generations have been represented in legal work.

But Kelso's wife, Kari, has another career in mind. She's winding up her studies at The University of Texas toward a doctorate in communication.

With a tenor voice of considerable merit, Kelso mulled over a career in opera briefly during his undergraduate days, but he decided to study law after receiving the same advice from several quarters: Study a profession in college; you can sing later if you want to.

He enjoys performing, though, and tries to find time to appear on the stage occasionally. During the past year he was on stage with the Sacramento summer Music Circus in "Paint Your Wagon" and "Unsinkable Molly Brown."

Kelso believes a university should seek out a public service function in its home community. It's been one of his major arguments for the Government Affairs Program.

"Law schools have strayed from that," he said. "But it's very important. Public service helps overcome a view in the public that the legal profession is greedy, out to make money. And another factor is that law students need to understand and participate in the process of how governmental agencies work."

The Government Affairs Program uses students and faculty to analyze and discuss major public policy issues. The approach is "studiously non-partisan," Kelso said.

"We try not to identify issues and we think it is important not to take an advocacy role," he said. "There's already plenty of that in Sacramento. We provide neutral, objective legal analyses and that's what's needed by both students and government."

The Institute for Legislative Practice, an arm of the Government Affairs Program, provides neutral analyses of public policy issues. A recent analysis resulted in a proposal to reduce the five years it now takes death penalty appeals to reach the California Supreme Court. Options included streamlining the records certification process and making more attorneys available to represent the appellants. Legislation to accomplish the time reduction is still pending.

Kelso said he learned much about how the press operates from his work as a legal expert during the Simpson trial. In addition to his appearance on KCRA in Sacramento, he was called on frequently by KFBK radio in Sacramento, the Sacramento Bee and other newspapers. "It reached the point where I trusted their judgment," Kelso said. "They need to be comprehensible."

He said he initially agreed with the ruling to give TV cameras access to the Simpson trial proceedings. In retrospect, he still feels cameras should be permitted at most trials as part of the public's right to know, but should be banned when attorneys begin using them for public grandstanding. And sadly, he noted, that's what happened at the Simpson trial.

In addition to his leadership role with the Government Affairs Program, Kelso has been teaching law classes in contracts, remedies, torts and unfair labor practices. His students enjoy the periodic flashes of humor that light up his presentations.

"Humor is an important part of the human condition," he explained. "I'm not talking about one-liners, but people are prone to do strange things and they show up in cases. When it comes to the law we're dealing with a pressure-packed business, and for students, a little humor makes it less threatening."

McGeorge Professor Clark Kelso is also an accomplished singer. Above, he appears on the cover of Stage Directions magazine. Kelso and his co-star were in the Davis Comic Opera Company's production of "The Pirates of Penzance."

JUST DO IT

INTRAMURALS ARE FUN, COMPETITIVE & POPULAR

"SLACKERS." YOU KNOW THE PERCEPTION. THEY DON'T LIVE UP TO THEIR POTENTIAL. NO GOALS, NO ASPIRATIONS.

Unless, of course, you're a "slacker" at UOP. Here, "slackers" are highly regarded. Esteemed for their perseverance and efforts. Admired for their struggles toward a common goal. That's because "slackers" at Pacific aren't those who shirk responsibility. "Slackers" is the name of a championship co-ed basketball team. They're fierce competitors in the popular world of intramural sports at Pacific.

TEAM KONET: Director of Intramurals Karla Konet, front row right, poses with her student assistants in 1995. Student organizers help to make events fair and fun and take place on time. The intramural staff operates out of an office by the Main Gym doors.

The intramural program at Pacific offers organized individual and team competitions in a variety of sports. Events are broken down to divisions for men, women and co-rec games, as well as for different skill levels. Intramural sports are organized and funded by the University, and are open to all students. New teams are formed for each sport during each season.

INTRAMURALS AT UOP are enjoying ever-increasing popularity as students from across the campus band together to form teams and compete in sports ranging from basketball, tennis, and flag football, to less traditional games, like innertube water polo.

According to Director of Intramurals Carla Konet, more than 1,800 students competed during the 1995-96 academic year in one or more organized intramural events. Groups from Greeks houses, residence halls and clubs as well as individuals have been forming teams since the mid-1950s to compete in exciting year-round athletics.

The popularity of intramurals is due in large part to their convenience. The intramural staff schedules games based on the availability of teams, so game times are flexible. "PLAYING DOESN'T TAKE A LOT OF TIME out of their busy schedules. They can attend classes, come in and play for an hour, and go back to classes or studying," said Konet. "The games provide a nice change of pace for students. It's not disruptive, and it's a good time. A chance to be competitive."

So says Farley Hall's Erica Selvaggio, a senior majoring in business. "I got involved because I really enjoy the competition." Selvaggio, a resident assistant for her dorm, recruited residents for her team simply by asking around. "There is a sense of teamwork," said Selvaggio. It's so much fun for everybody, regardless of whether you win or lose." She's quick to point out, however, that Farley's shooting for victory.

"OBVIOUSLY, NOBODY WANTS TO LOSE," admits Team Captain Dan Millsap, a Phi Delta Theta and junior in the School of Engineering. "It can get very competitive during the games, but most people are out there simply for a good time and a good game."

"One of our strengths is that we're very accessible to students, and they like that," said Konet. "Our main source of new participants is word-of-mouth." And it seems to work. Participation is high and team recruitment is a breeze, according to captains.

"OURS IS A PRETTY ACTIVE DORM," explains Selvaggio, whose team has endured the rigors of intramural volleyball, soccer and softball. "We're the 'transfer' dorm, so we get many of the transfer students who come in to UOP, and many of them want to get involved in campus activities."

Konet finds that when visiting other university campuses in her other role as head coach of Pacific's field hockey team, she has a chance to look over other intramural programs. The professionalism of Pacific's program stands out.

The intramural staff promotes fairness throughout the games. They steadfastly refer to each season's team rosters, ensuring that only players listed see game time. "We don't want situations where some team is doing poorly in basketball and decides to enlist the help of somebody who just happens to be great at the game. It wouldn't be fair to the others," said Konet.

As Konet explains, "SURE, IT'S FUN TO COMPETE, but only if it's done in the spirit of true sportsmanship." Players can be penalized, or even ejected for such offenses as swearing, disrespecting officials, taunting and fighting.

Pacific intramurals is always undergoing development, Konet said. A few years ago, team standings and scores were handwritten. Now they are computerized. New equipment has been purchased, and scheduling has been expanded to fit the changing schedules of students. Keeping up with the changes is the greatest challenge of the intramural staff.

"IT'S A CHALLENGE, in many cases, to schedule some of the games, especially since there's so much competition for the playing area among the collegiate teams, sports recreation classes and intramurals," Konet said. Conflicting needs for playing sites, as well as increasing numbers of evening classes for students, will require further developments in the intramural program to satisfy everybody's needs.

In the meantime, students can look forward to continued activities throughout the year, as long as "Slackers" and other players call a "time out" during their week to enjoy intramural athletics.

VOLLEYBALL PLAYER BATTLES BACK

Two years ago, when her back pain became almost unbearable, volleyball standout Addie Hauschild heard the words every athlete dreads. "The first three doctors I saw told me I'd never play again," she said.

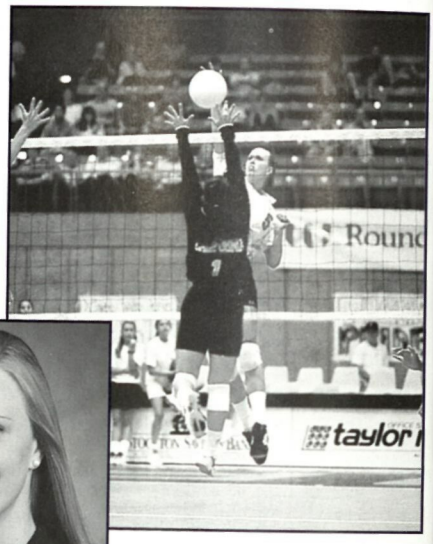
Years of volleyball playing and weightlifting had ruptured a disc in her spine, and she could scarcely stand or straighten her leg, and she endured shooting pains and muscle spasms. Her choice was to skip her sophomore season and rest her back, or have surgery and try to rehabilitate as quickly as possible. She had surgery Feb. 8, 1995, and hasn't regretted it since.

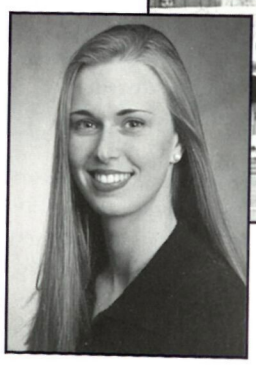
After a productive sophomore year, Hauschild is returning to the form that made her a freshman All-American. Against CSU Fullerton Sept. 28, she flirted with a triple double, claiming 13 kills, 12 digs and eight blocks, and in a big Pacific win over highly-ranked Stanford Sept. 17, she had five service aces. As a starting middle blocker, she leads the team in blocks and is among the Big West Conference leaders.

Accomplishments aside, Hauschild is just thrilled to be playing again. "I don't know what words to use – it's an overwhelming feeling," she said. "The first game I came back my whole family was in tears watching from the stands."

Hauschild would like to play professional volleyball after graduation, and there is such a team in her hometown, Sacramento. Beyond that, as a sport medicine major, she is interested in becoming a physical therapist, or perhaps an athletic trainer.

It's no surprise Hauschild can imagine a career working with athletes; she says she has learned a great deal from her UOP coaches and teammates. "I've grown up a lot at Pacific. I know you read it in the newspaper from athletes all the time, but it's true here – we're like a family. The coaches take time to understand you as a person, and those of us on the team have a lot of fun together."





Addie Hauschild, left and above, has returned from serious injury to be a force in the middle.

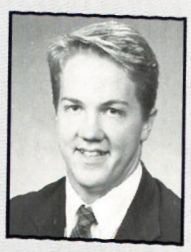
Hauschild is easy-going off the court, enjoying movies and music and playing the piano, but on the court she's strictly business. Her game face and 6-foot-2-inch frame in the middle of the court have intimidated more than one Pacific opponent.

On Oct. 6, however, it was Hauschild who was in awe, and happily so. During an exhibition match at the Spanos Center between the Tigers and the U.S. Olympic team, Hauschild got to face off against – and briefly play alongside – her volleyball idol, former Pacific All-American and current Olympian Elaina Oden. "It was almost like a dream," she said afterwards. The same could be said of Hauschild's courageous return from injury.

SPORTS HIGHLIGHTS

• Sunday, Oct. 6, was a special day for sports fans at Pacific. In the evening, the U.S. Olympic women's volleyball team squared off against the Tigers in an exhibition match at the Spanos Center. Olympic team member Elaina Oden, a two-time All-American at Pacific, and Olympic coach Terry Liskevych, who coached the Tigers for eight seasons, were honored before the match, as were other participants in the Olympics from UOP: swimmer Brad Schumacher; volleyball player and current assistant coach Jayne Gibson-McHugh; U.S. water polo coach and current Tiger aquatics coach John Tanner; discus thrower Jim Corson; and the late Cecil Disbrow, who was a shot putter. A few hours before the match, members of the U.S. women's volleyball team took part in a free clinic for Stockton-area girls in the UOP Main Gym. The Spanos Center was occupied, as the Sacramento Kings of the NBA were holding an open practice there. More than 700 basketball fans showed up for the practice, which had its own Olympic touch – gold medal winner Mitch Richmond made his first appearance of the pre-season.

• Hopes are high for the 1996-97 men's basketball team, and not just because of size in the pivot (7-foot Michael Olowokandi, 6-foot-10-inch Rayne Mahaffey, 6-foot-9-inch Vic Trierweiler, 6-foot-9-inch Nick Foster). Among the seven starters returning from last year's 15-win season is Pacific's career leader in 3-pointers and steals, Adam Jacobsen. Jacobsen won second team Big West Conference honors last year for the second straight year and has a streak of 54 straight games as a starter. He combines hard-nosed team leadership with scoring punch from beyond the arc; for two years, he has led the Big West in three-pointers per game. With teams concentrating on guarding the Tigers' big men, Jacobsen could be set to revise some of his three-point shooting records.



ADAM JACOBSEN

• There's little doubt that, as the sole returning starter from last year's women's basketball team, Kate McAllister will see more than her share of double-teams in the 1996-97 season. But even with the extra attention, McAllister could be a big offensive force for the Tigers. She set a school record last season averaging 18.8 points a game, earning her first-team All-Big West honors. She also was named the 1996 Big West Tournament MVP when she tallied 70 points and 26 rebounds on a sprained ankle over three postseason games. The 6-foot-1-inch senior also brought down an average of eight rebounds a game last year.

KATE MCALLISTER

Alumni and other friends of Pacific are invited to join President Donald DeRosa and Karen DeRosa on a once-in-a-lifetime educational tour of the Mediterranean from Malta to Monte Carlo.

"Italian Passage" will be a 13-day adventure featuring a seven-night cruise aboard the 440-foot masted sail ship, Wind Star. After flying into Malta, tour-goers will travel to Sicily and the Amalfi Coast of Italy, which includes a stop in Sorrento to see the excavations at Pompeii. The tour continues up the coast to Anzio, made famous during World War II, and Civitavecchia, gateway to Rome. Then the group sets sail for Livorno, port for Florence, and Portofino on the Italian Riviera, before completing the voyage in Monte Carlo. Tour members leave San Francisco June 25, 1997, and return July 7, 1997.

Along with sailing to some of the most picturesque locales in Europe, tour members will be offered on-board lectures by historian Dorothy French of UC Berkeley and art historian Cathleen Schrader of McGill University.

The cost of the trip for alumni and friends of the University starts at $4,189. For more information, contact the Office of Alumni and Parent Programs, (209) 946-2391.

Fall Festival Oct. 26 was a hit in its first year, with several thousand people gathering in blustery Stagg Memorial Stadium to visit booths, hear music and sample different foods. Special thanks go to Steve Whyte, COP '86, for promoting the event, and to campus organizations ASUOP and UPBEAT for their backing. The music of Jim Belushi and the Sacred Hearts was a festival highlight, but there were other events over the weekend, including class reunions, the Pacific Homecoming Soccer Classic and the Eberhardt School of Business Entrepreneur Seminar.

The 1996 reunions now give way to the 1997 alumni class gatherings, which begin with Commencement Weekend. The Class of 1947 will gather for its 50th reunion May 23-25. Friday evening, May 23, will be the reunion gathering, and Saturday morning, May 24, will be the traditional rose processional, followed by the Half-Century Club luncheon.

Reunion Coordinator Kelli Page is asking for volunteers from any classes in years ending with the numbers 2 or 7 to help plan reunions for next fall. Call (209) 946-2391.

LICHTENSTEIN UP FOR ALUMNI CHALLENGE

The Pacific Alumni Association's new president, Stan Lichtenstein, COP '49, won't have any trouble pacing himself during his year in office – last year, he placed first in his age group in a triathlon in his home town of Alameda.

"I work out every day, but I was really proud of that," he said.

When it comes to alumni affairs, Lichtenstein sees himself as less of a solo performer and more of a team player. He wants to carry on what Price Burlington, Business '81, accomplished in his two years as association president.

"Price has done a magnificent job making alumni more visible," Lichtenstein said. "He has been invited to attend Regents meetings, he was the third speaker at President DeRosa's inauguration – he's made it clear to the University that we're an entity, and we're trying to help. My goal is to continue that theme."

Two other goals Lichtenstein has for the coming year are to increase the number of alumni clubs and the amount of publicity the University garners. "I'm excited that we have a new club in Washington, D.C. and we're getting one in New York," he said, "but we're not strong in some areas we should be." Lichtenstein would like to organize a workshop to train club leaders, and he thinks perhaps he may have to train some editors and reporters, too, so they pay more attention to Pacific.

"We had a publicity problem back in 1950 – the Bay Area didn't even mention (Tiger quarterback) Eddie LeBaron as an All-American candidate," Lichtenstein said. "We had a car caravan go from UOP to the San Francisco Chronicle building. We hung the sports editor in effigy, outside the building. All the newspapers ran big stories about it. Of course we hope we don't have to do that again, but sometimes you have to light a fire under some people."

Lichtenstein is well acquainted with the media. He spent 25 years in commercial broadcasting, doing TV and radio sales and production, and he and his wife, Diane, owned two stations in Salinas. The past 20 years, Lichtenstein has been teaching mass communication at Chabot College, where he has been chair of the department, and at the University of San Francisco.

One of his favorite activities is leading classes for senior groups on the subject on old-time radio. "I have slides and audio tapes from programs from the 1920s to the 1950s," Lichtenstein said. "It's a lot of fun and a source of joy. People love to reminisce and I love to do it with them." When he isn't teaching, Lichtenstein is volunteering. Along with all his work on behalf of Pacific, he also is chairing the City of Alameda Cable Commission.

A San Francisco native and 30-year Oakland resident, Lichtenstein has loved living in Alameda the past 10 years. "Diane and I live right on a lagoon," he said, "and we take the canoe out and paddle around in the afternoons. It's wonderful to be on the water."

Banner year for Medic Alert founder

This is a big year for Chrissie Woolcock Collins, Conservatory '28, co-founder of Medic Alert, the worldwide medical emergency identification service. In June, the American Medical Association awarded her its Citation for Distinguished Service, the highest honor given to a nonphysician. In September, the Emergency Nurses Association gave Collins its top service award.

Chrissie Woolcock Collins, '28

Not bad for a former music teacher celebrating her 90th birthday.

"These honors have made me very happy," Collins said from her home in Turlock, "but what's pleased me the most over the years is not the personal gratification, but the many people who now recognize that Medic Alert saves lives."

Collins' unlikely rise to prominence is a well-known story to many of the 2.7 million worldwide wearers of Medic Alert bracelets and pendants. Her daughter, Linda, nearly died in 1953 from a toxic reaction to medicine while being treated for an injured finger. As a result, Collins and her husband, Marion, a physician, tied a piece of paper to Linda's jacket or wrist explaining her allergy. When Linda went off to college, they fashioned a bracelet with the now-famous Medic Alert emblem. People who saw the bracelet wanted one, and the couple began producing them one by one, until the business went national in 1957.

When Marion Collins died in 1976, Chrissie Collins remained on the Medic Alert Board of Directors, and stays active in the organization. Medic Alert is a volunteer-driven non-profit group, and Collins has a lifetime of involvement in worthy causes. "I'm a born volunteer," she said. "I was active in the Girl Scouts and the American Field Service, and my financial position was such that I could devote time to voluntary organizations."

Collins dates her spirit of volunteerism to her days at Pacific. "I loved going to Pacific. Pacific not only increased my education, but it let me see the importance of helping other people in the world."

The Collins family has quite a legacy at UOP. Collins' son, Tom, and his wife, Wendy Wight Collins, are both 1966 graduates. He is a professor at University of Wisconsin, Platteville, and is also artistic director of a Shakespeare festival there; Wendy Collins does costuming for the festival. Chrissie Collins' daughter, Margaret, also attended UOP, and her grandson, Ned, is a student in UOP's School of International Studies, having recently finished a semester in France.

Collins has become something of a celebrity as Medic Alert's roving ambassador at large – she's made many media appearances, and has been nominated for a Presidential Medal of Freedom. Despite her age, she's still very much in touch with the future needs of the business. "Medic Alert has a great challenge in the present time, with advancing technology, 'smart cards' and computer databases that can maintain our members' medical records," she said. "It's a challenge to keep up with the way the world's going, and I hope Medic Alert can do that."

College. Current plans are to teach two more years then move back to his home in Lincoln City, Ore.

Lloyd Bakan, COP '61, has two of his paintings published in the prestigious national book, "The Best of Acrylic Painting." He and his wife, Ellen Hoover Bakan, COP '65, live in Sacramento.

Allen Buckner, Conservatory '61, retired after 16 years of service as assistant superintendent with the Albany County School District in Laramie, Wyo. He and his wife, Charlotte, live in Boulder, Colo.

Randall Smith, COP '61, is 1996 president of the National Association of Home Builders. He and his brother own The Smith Company in Danville, which builds high-end custom homes.

Thomas Farley, COP '65, attended the 12th Annual Highlights Foundation Writers Workshop at the Chautauqua Institution in western New York State this summer. He and his wife, Sandra Farley, COP '65, live in Redwood City.

Karin Rogers Benning, COP '66, teaches eighth grade language arts at Silverado Middle School in Napa. Her husband, Bob, owns a laboratory supply business, Benmark. Their daughter, Lauren Benning, COP '96, is in the master's program in the communication department at UOP. They are residents of Napa.

Linda Hammarberg-Prinn, Business '66, has worked in the accounting field and now manages family real estate, including a vineyard in Napa. Linda and her husband, Brian, have two children and live in Encino.

Artist is eyewitness to history

Walter Stewart, COP '56, spent a week teaching an Elderhostel at the Feather River Inn this fall, "eating too much and having too much fun," he said. So he went to work right away, hopping a plane for Denver and the trial for the suspects in the Oklahoma City bombing.

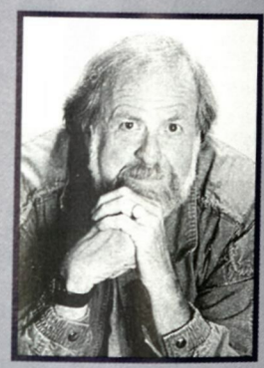
Stewart is an Emmy award-winning courtroom artist, who has drawn many of the famous criminal trials of the past 35 years. He completed the Polly Klaas trial this summer, is working now on Oklahoma City and the Unabomber case in Sacramento, and was an artist on the Jack Ruby, Charles Manson, Patty Hearst and Sirhan Sirhan trials.

In 1992, he thought his days spent capturing the drama of a trial court were over. He had been an artist with NBC for more than 25 years, but finally, cameras were allowed in courtrooms and no one needed a seasoned artist anymore.

So Stewart turned to writing books. He enjoys drawing cartoons and has written a couple of books combining California history with his drawings. He has also authored what he calls "a light look at pro football."

"And now, after the O.J. Simpson trial, a lot of judges are prohibiting cameras again, which has been pretty good for those of us who are courtroom artists," Stewart said. "This year has been gangbusters."

It has been an exciting life. Stewart majored in art at UOP, and was a protégé of art department Chair Richard Reynolds. "I really do owe it all to him," Stewart said, "as he encouraged me to move forward." Stewart attended the Art Center in Los Angeles, graduating from there as well.



Walter Stewart, '53

Timing helps. Stewart was working at a Dallas television station the day President Kennedy was shot. He had been hosting a talk show, and he was the station's assistant art director on Nov. 22, 1963. It was Friday, a pay day, so he decided to take in the president's motorcade as he went to the bank to cash his paycheck.

"I was at the far end of Dealey Plaza when the president's car went by. I took a Polaroid picture and was on my knees on the sidewalk putting the necessary goo on it afterward when I heard the shots," he said. He ran toward them and took several more pictures, then ran back to the station, an ABC affiliate. "I had the first picture of the Texas Book Depository broadcast on network television."

Stewart said he talked his way into drawing the Jack Ruby trial for the local station. On the basis of that work, he was offered a job on KRON in San Francisco and worked there two years until he went to NBC.

So, was there more than one shooter in the Kennedy assassination? Did shots come from the Plaza as well as the book depository? Stewart thinks Oswald acted alone. "In his own twisted way, Oswald was trying to impress his wife, and I don't think it mattered who he shot as long as it was someone famous." Stewart said a little-known fact about the events around the assassination solidified his opinion. A right-wing general who lived in Dallas and openly supported the John Birch Society had a shot fired into his living room the week before Nov. 22. Ballistics showed it was the same gun Oswald used, Stewart said.

He also didn't buy the conspiracy theory about Jack Ruby, because he was dating a singer and dancer from one of Ruby's nightclubs at the time. "Ruby had two nightclubs, one was legit, where Laura worked, and the other was illegal. He kept it open by bribing the police. He was also a superpatriot, a hot head who always carried a gun and a lot of money, and I think he just happened to be at the police station on other business when he heard they were going to move Oswald," Stewart said. He said Ruby had left his favorite dog in the car and Stewart thinks that wouldn't have been the case if he'd planned to shoot Oswald.

During his week at the Feather River Inn, Stewart talked about how an artist works, offering slide and videotape of his work. He has been recreating many old trials for an Arts and Entertainment network program, "American Justice."

"Everyone is interested in crime," he said, noting that his minor in college was psychology. "It's a perfect match."

His courtroom work will be chronicled in a book he is working on with a New York publisher. He hopes it will be in print by mid-1997. "I've felt very fortunate to have been in on many of the major events of our times," he said.

"Sing the Light," is the first book for the 1969 Conservatory graduate. The second novel, "Sing the Warmth," has been published by Ace Science Fiction this fall.

Marley's education at UOP has been a foundation for all her work, which still includes singing as well as writing.

The mezzo-soprano sings often with the Seattle Opera near the home she shares with her husband and son in Redmond, Wash. She has sung with the Seattle Symphony and many area chamber music organizations. "My specialties are American music and sacred music," she said, "particularly American Negro spirituals."

LOUISE C. MARLEY, '69

She feels that 1995 was her "Cinderella year." She sang the role of Tisbet, one of Cinderella's stepsisters, in the Seattle Opera production of "La Cenerentola." "My biggest role yet with the company," she said. She published her first novel and was on hand for its presentation at the World Fantasy Convention in Baltimore last October.

"I wrote my book as science fiction because that's what I love to read," she said. She has also published non-fiction articles for music publications and recently sold two new science fiction stories.

"I'm not exaggerating when I say that I grew up at UOP, both musically and personally," she said. "I quote my teachers, I remember my friends there often. I came to UOP to study music, and my work there provided a foundation that I've built on for years, both in music and in writing."

Marley teaches voice, English and Italian diction for singers and vocal repertoire at Cornish College of the Arts in Seattle. She maintains an active private studio.

Foursquare Church. Scott is manager of the test, design and quality departments for Precise Connections, a contract manufacturer of printed circuit boards.

Presto from Modesto: Five Engineering Grads

Call them the fab five. Last spring, the School of Engineering graduated a group of Modesto-area students united by more than their list of accomplishments. All were transfers from Modesto Junior College. "I can't think of a time when we've had such an outstanding group of students all come from one school," said engineering Professor Gary Martin, director of co-ops and special programs.

Bill Dadesho received the 1996 Academic Excellence in Computer Engineering award. He was president and treasurer of the student branch of the Institute of Electrical and Electronic Engineers (IEEE) and was also vice president of Eta Kappa Nu, the electrical engineers honor society.

Greg Lemos was named the Outstanding Electrical Engineering Student. He graduated with high honors, received the Barnum-Everett Scholarship and was nominated for the American Academy of Distinguished Students. He was an active member of Tau Beta Pi, the national engineering honor society, and served as president of Eta Kappa Nu. He has accepted a position with Intel Corporation.

Tomy Doomany graduated with highest honors and was the recipient of a Significant Contribution Award by the UOP Division of Student Life for his service as president of the student branch of IEEE. Was selected for Tau Beta Pi, Eta Kappa Nu and the American Academy of Distinguished Students. He has started working for Anderson Consulting and is currently assisting the Franchise Tax Board in Sacramento.

Kevin Baskin served as chapter president of American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME). While on co-op at New United Motor Manufacturing Inc., he received special recognition for his excellent work (as reported in the summer 1994 Pacific Review). He has accepted employment with General Motors Cadillac Division in Michigan and plans to attend the General Motors Institute to continue his studies.

Wuthea Seng was a member of the IEEE and had a strong co-op with the city and county of San Francisco.

"We're proud of this group's accomplishments, and hope to recruit more just like them," said Professor Richard Turpin of the electrical engineering department.

Business '87, and her husband, Michael, a daughter, Madison Grace.

To KRISTI KERN PICO, COP '88, and her husband, Patrick, a daughter, Kaleigh Emma.

To ROB ROBINSON, Business '90, and LISA MARIE DORICH ROBINSON, Business '90, a daughter, Courtney Anne.

Marriages

William Bartz II, COP '83, and Terri Hoffman.

ERICA BERRY, COP '93, and TODD WOODFORD, COP '93.

Memoriam

JOHN MITCHELL, COP '41
MARY RENNELS, Education '60
GREG GLASER, Pharmacy '76
WALTER SOPHORN VANN, Pharmacy '96

ROBERT L. HEYBORNE, Dean of the University of the Pacific's School of Engineering from 1969 to his retirement in 1990, died Oct. 13. He was 73. During Heyborne's tenure, UOP increased enrollment, attained full accreditation and instituted its well-known co-op program. He received the Clement J. Freund Award in 1986 from the American Society of Engineering Education, the top award given in the area of cooperative education. His other awards included being chosen Engineer of the Year in 1972 by the San Joaquin Joint Council of Professional Engineering Societies and the Distinguished Alumnus Award from the College of Engineering at Utah State University. Prior to coming to UOP, Heyborne was a professor of electrical engineering at Utah State University, where he was selected Professor of the Year in 1962. He is survived by his wife, son and daughter.

LUCY E. RITTER, University Regent from 1974 to 1991, died Sept. 14 in Sacramento. She was 85. Ritter was born in Shanghai where her father, Ovid Ritter, was a manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. When she was 10, her family left China so her father could become executive vice president and controller of the College of the Pacific. She graduated from Stanford University, earning her bachelor's at age 19 and her master's at 20. She took a clerical job in Sacramento and within 20 years had become a pioneer for women in finance. She became vice president of California-Western States Life Insurance Co. and managed the company's $160 million portfolio. She was active in a variety of civic groups, serving as president of the Sacramento's Children's Home and as a board member of the Crocker Art Gallery Association. She was the author of two books: "An Ode to Common Sense" and "Lucy's Twentieth Century." She is survived by a sister and several nieces and nephews.

PHIL GUTHRIE, COP '51, an award-winning spokesman for the California prison system, died Sept. 16 in Santa Rosa. He was 67. Guthrie was born in Wallace, Idaho, and raised in Williams in Colusa County. After graduating from Pacific, he served in the Army during the Korean War. After the war, he taught school in Carmichael for a few years, then joined the state Department of Corrections. Guthrie was known for his commitment to openness and honesty during the two decades he worked in public information. After his retirement in 1984 from the Department of Corrections, the Central Valley chapter of the Society of Professional Journalists gave him its "Freedom of Information" award, an honor usually reserved for journalists. He is survived by his wife, two daughters, a son, a stepson, two stepdaughters and eight grandchildren.

WALTER S. VANN, Pharmacy '96, was murdered in his apartment in Sacramento Sept. 27. He was 24. At press time, the person allegedly responsible was in custody awaiting trial. A native of Cambodia, Vann lived in the U.S. for 15 years, and Stockton since 1986. He graduated from Tokay High School and entered UOP in 1991. He was an active member of Phi Delta Chi fraternity. He graduated with a Doctor of Pharmacy degree last May, and had accepted a position as a pharmacist at Raley's in El Dorado Hills three days prior to his death. He is survived by five brothers and sisters and his parents in Stockton.

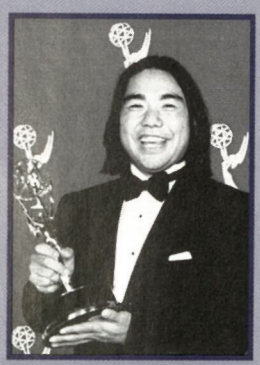
ALUMNUS HAS TV FANS' DREAM JOB

David Kasama, COP '89, has a job your average blurry-eyed, star-gazing TV addict only dreams about.

As associate producer of "Talk Soup," the cable program that wittily summarizes the week's talk shows, Kasama edits outrageous moments from Geraldo and Rikki Lake and writes wisecracks for guest hosts like Roseanne and Adam "Batman" West.

"The answer to the most frequently asked question is, yes, I did get to meet Kato Kaelin when he guested on the show," said Kasama, chuckling. "We're not close friends, however."

The show, which is known for launching former host Greg Kinnear's acting career, earned Kasama and his co-workers a Daytime Emmy Award last year. "I'd like to say it sits on my mantle, but I live in an apartment," Kasama said. "I use it as a big paperweight."



DAVID KASAMA, '89

While Kasama does not normally appear on "Talk Soup," he did provide a bizarre cameo that earned him some notoriety. He was in the hospital for several days being treated for an infection of the cecum, a part of the large intestine. His boss thought a cecum infection sounded distasteful enough to be funny, and so, with Kasama's consent, guest "reporter" Kathleen Sullivan did a special report on Kasama's condition. "After that I went on vacation to Kauai," Kasama said, "and one day I'm at a swim-up bar when a waiter comes up and says, 'You're the cecum guy!' "

Kasama is fairly accustomed to getting five minutes of fame. He has been a contestant on several game shows, including "The Match Game," "Scrabble," "The Grudge Match" and "The Price is Right," where he won $13,000. "That money paid for my last year's tuition at UOP," Kasama said.

Kasama credits Pacific with getting him into the TV industry. While a student in communication, he interned for two years at KQCA Channel 58 in Sacramento. He transferred to Pepperdine and interned at PM Magazine in L.A., but returned to UOP to complete his degree.

After graduation, Kasama moved to Southern California and eventually became a production assistant at The Movietime Channel. The company was later bought by Time-Warner and turned into E! Entertainment Television, which produces "Talk Soup."

Kasama said when he went into the entertainment business, "my goal was to break down stereotypes and racism against minorities." He is currently working on a screenplay that fits that purpose – a biography of his late father, a former bomber pilot for Japan who came to the U.S. after World War II and became a successful attorney.

Kasama, who is from Fremont, would like to move back to the Bay Area and produce his own show some day. He thinks he can survive life without meeting TV stars like Ellen DeGeneres and Tori Spelling on the "Talk Soup" set.

"Even a job like this gets mundane," he said. "It's true I meet celebrities, but it's not like they invite me out for a beer afterwards."

1923 BACK IN TIME:

Pacific's Stockton campus wasn't always stately oaks and verdant lawns. In fact, before there was any campus at all, there were classes in the second floor of the Stockton Record building downtown, shown at left. From 1923-24, Dean G. A. Werner and two assistants taught a freshman class in the building, and the students were the first class to complete their Pacific degrees in Stockton. The campus wasn't dedicated until March 1925.

QUERY:

Everyone has wondered at one time or another, "Whatever happened to...?" There's always someone we went to school with that seemed destined for a strange or fascinating life. Yet when you look for them at reunions and homecomings, they never show up. So here is next issue's Query: What one long-lost person from your days at Pacific are you most curious about, and why? Send your response to: Pacific Review, UOP, Stockton CA 95211, or e-mail jwills@uop.edu.

Summer 1996 Query: What book would you recommend to a current UOP student?

I would recommend to my fellow Pacificites that they read Barbara Tuchman's "Practicing History" before they graduate. A past mistress in the use of the English language, Tuchman, a winner of several Pulitzer Prizes, rivals Winston Churchill for the title of best historian of the 20th century writing in the English language.

In "Practicing History," Tuchman explains how she discovered the joys of scholarship and the value of careful craftsmanship. While introducing the reader to some of her best short works, Tuchman explains the necessities of telling the truth and of keeping the reader turning the pages. She also explains how a wife and mother can balance a career, academic achievement and family life.

Thank you to all who made donations to the University during the 1995-96 fiscal year which ended on June 30, 1996. Over 8,000 individuals, groups, organizations and foundations made contributions that helped make it a successful year.

This has been a significant year for the University as we begin a new era under the leadership of President Donald V. DeRosa. During the past year he assembled a highly skilled management team that includes Dr. Philip N. Gilbertson, provost and John M. Evey, vice president for institutional advancement.

As an alumnus and as Chairman of the Board, I am especially gratified that there has been continuing support of the University as we move through this period of transition.

We can all take pride in the University of the Pacific which has never lost sight of the fact that it is the undergraduate student who is the primary concern of the institution. High quality teaching in the vital liberal arts area, coupled with expertise in the professional schools, make this University distinctive in higher education in the West. This University has the distinction of having a presence in three of the most interesting cities in California. With the main campus in Stockton, the School of Dentistry in San Francisco, and McGeorge School of Law in Sacramento, the University of the Pacific is indeed the comprehensive independent university in Northern California.

Again, I appreciate all of your support. We can look forward to an even stronger University in the future as a result of this continued interest in the University of the Pacific.

Sincerely,

Robert M. Monagan '42
Chairman of the Board

ENDOWING A DREAM

This spring, UOP senior Analia Puga will be the first in her family to graduate from college.

She credits the Sharon Brookhart Krakora Endowed Scholarship for making her dream come true.

Puga grew up in Thornton, CA, a small Central Valley farming town where her Mexican immigrant parents worked in the fields and a local cannery. She desperately wanted to come to UOP to study to become a bilingual educator. "But I thought only rich kids went there," she says.

An excellent student, she applied anyway and was accepted. Puga was able to cobble together enough scholarships, grants and loans to pay for her education. In her junior year, she won the Sharon Brookhart Krakora Endowed Scholarship.

Puga was a beneficiary of those who generously support UOP's endowment fund.

"I'm very grateful," says Puga, who hopes to teach disadvantaged elementary school children. "I wouldn't be here without this help."

UOP HONORS PATRON OF THE YEAR

For the last 22 years, Frances Pruner has helped educate deserving students by giving to the Patrons of Pacific program. This year, UOP honored her as its Patrons of Pacific Donor of the Year.

Each year, Mrs. Pruner received a letter thanking her from the Patron Scholar who benefited from her generosity. She even talked with some on the phone and met with others at the annual Patrons of Pacific Recognition Event. That personal contact, she says, made her realize that her contribution was needed and appreciated.

"I got the satisfaction of seeing smart young people who need a little help through a UOP schooling," says Mrs. Pruner.

"It makes me feel good to know I had a small part in helping them reach their goals."

Donor of the Year Frances Pruner and Patron Scholar Julie Hulcomb

STOCKTON FRIENDS

BRAD SCHUMACHER MAKES UOP HISTORY AT THE ATLANTA GAMES

Four years ago, high school swimming sensation Bradley Schumacher was being wooed by the nation's top colleges and universities. But thanks to a full athletic scholarship from University of the Pacific, the Bowie, MD., teenager decided to come to Stockton.

Last summer, Brad became a UOP legend as a member of the U.S. Olympic Team, winning gold medals in the 4 x 200 meter and 4 x 100 meter freestyle relay races.

Brad's success was fueled by talent, drive and hard work. But he also credits UOP for helping him get to Atlanta.

Thanks to UOP's financial help, Brad didn't have to worry about supporting himself while training for the Olympics. When the Business Administration major wasn't hitting the books, he was spending his time in UOP's Olympic-sized Kjeldsen Pool.

That training and dedication paid off for Brad and for UOP. We're proud of our double Gold-Medalist Olympian and happy to have had some small part in his great triumph.

TED F. BAUN GIVES GIFT TO NEW SWIM COMPLEX

UOP has many friends. But few are more loyal than Ted F. Baun, who spearheaded the fundraising drive for a new half-million-dollar swim complex with a substantial gift that enabled the University to break ground in the fall of '96.

Baun is a longtime UOP supporter. He played football here in the '20s, graduating in 1927 with a degree in engineering. Attending UOP is something of a Baun family tradition: his wife, father-in-law, sister and eight of his children all graduated from the University. Baun served on the Board of Regents for 44 years and today is a Regent Emeritus.

His contributions to UOP are legendary, marked by the fact that his name adorns the Engineering building, Baun Hall, and the Baun Student Fitness Center. When the University decided that the Chris Kjeldsen Pool needed a permanent support building, Ted Baun stepped up to the plate with a generous donation.

The new facility, set to open this spring, will feature showers, locker rooms, meeting space, offices, access for physically challenged individuals, and an area to showcase the rich history of the Pacific aquatics program.

Baun says that giving to UOP is easy. "I love the University of the Pacific," he says. "I just enjoy helping out where I can."

PATRONS AND SCHOLARS WORKING TOGETHER

Last year, Patron Scholar Annelys Hagen got a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to personally thank the woman who helped give her a UOP education.

Through the Annual Fund's Patrons of Pacific program, Hagen met with Catherine Mueller, whose donation funded Hagen's two-year scholarship. "I told her how much I appreciated the fact that her support allowed me to go to school," says Hagen, who will graduate this spring with a BA in music.

That meeting was typical of the innovative Patrons of Pacific program, which creates partnerships and personal relationships between donors and the students who benefit from their generosity.

The program, established in 1974 to recognize donors of $1,000 or more for unrestricted academic use, pairs each Patron Scholar with an individual donor. Upon being chosen for the honor (a student must first demonstrate academic achievement, special talents and involvement on campus), students contact their Patrons, initiating a friendship that provides immeasurable benefits for both parties.

Patrons such as Mrs. Mueller get to see the tangible results of their contributions. For many, the Patrons of Pacific program is the beginning of a lifelong friendship.

For Hagen, who hopes to work with special-needs children doing music therapy after completing a postgraduate music therapy certification program, that personal contact with her Patron provided an important incentive.

"Knowing Mrs. Mueller was supporting me made me work even harder," she says. "I thought I should get as much out of my education as I could because she was so generous."

STOCKTON FRIENDS

IN APPRECIATION

Many years ago when the members of the Half Century Club asked History Professor Erling Erickson to speak about significant changes during their lifetimes this century, he talked with them about the development of the automobile. They responded with humorous stories drawn from their own experiences with early cars.

Roy and Winona Wilson told one of the most memorable. Following their Pacific commencement in 1928, they left Stockton at 11 a.m. to drive to their wedding in Sacramento. They patched and repaired their tires fourteen times and made it to the church a few minutes after 5 p.m., just in time for the ceremony.

The Wilsons went on to spend more than 60 years together — he was a Methodist minister and she was his partner and mother of their children. Recently, we received a letter from those children with a check enclosed for $8,550.

"We rejoice in being able to make this gift to you from the resources which our father and mother, Roy and Nonie Wilson, accumulated through a life of Christian stewardship and wise financial management," the letter said. "We know you will receive it with gratitude and appreciation for their commitment to University of the Pacific and the cause of higher education."

STOCKTON BENEFACTOR

METHODIST STUDENTS BENEFIT FROM BISHOP SCHOLARSHIPS

The University of the Pacific has unique ties with the Methodist Church, going back to its founding in 1851 by Methodist missionaries. Which is why the University in 1990 established the Bishop Scholar program, designed to help qualified Methodist students from 965 congregations in California, Arizona, Nevada, Hawaii and the territory of Guam.

Over 100 students have benefited from the program, which provides four-year, $10,000 scholarships.

Anthony Hughes is one of those students. A junior at UOP, Hughes is working toward a bachelor's degree in sports science and hopes to become a physical therapist. While looking at colleges, he heard about UOP's Bishop Scholar program from his United Methodist pastor and decided to apply. When it came time to choose a school, the scholarship was the deciding factor. "All the pieces fell together," says Hughes.

Sarah Porter, a freshman pre-dental major at UOP, heard about the Bishop Scholarship a little closer to home: her brother Doug, a senior, is also a recipient. "Of the small, private schools I applied to, UOP was the most generous," she says.

Porter and Hughes point out that being a Bishop Scholar has advantages that go beyond the financial. Porter has met other students with strong church backgrounds like her own. "I've made a lot of connections," she says.

Hughes appreciates being reminded that the church is involved in his education. "My religion is part of my schooling," he says. "It's nice to know it's taking care of me."

CHEVRON SUPPORTS JOHN MUIR CONFERENCE

Famed naturalist John Muir had a vision in which nature and man would live together in harmony. Thanks in part to a generous donation from the Chevron Corporation, scholars met at this year's John Muir Conference to discuss ways to realize Muir's dream. The conference, held April 21-28 at UOP and in the Martinez area, brought together people with differing views on the environment to examine John Muir's writings and discuss what they mean for today. "Traditionally there has been polarization and confrontation between environmentalists and companies such as Chevron," said G. Michael Marcy, public affairs manager for the Chevron Chemical Company in San Ramon. "We were happy to help create a forum in which issues concerning the development of natural resources could be aired with respect and mutual concern." Ron Limbaugh, Ph.D., professor of history at UOP and holder of the Rockwell Hunt Chair in California History, praised Chevron for helping to make the conference a reality: "Chevron's contribution was crucial in enabling us to bring top scholars from around the country and the English-speaking world together at UOP for a conference of great significance," he said.

DENTAL ALUMNI

DR. BERNARD S. AARONS, '44B

There are few people who so clearly embody the spirit of loyalty and generosity at the School of Dentistry as Dr. Bernard S. Aarons. "Bernie" Aarons has been involved in school life from his graduation with the wartime class of 1944B. He has served as a board member with the Alumni Association, with the Pacific Dental Education Foundation and as a friend and counselor to three deans.

Dr. Aarons has always been generous to the school and has encouraged others to follow his example. "Giving back to the school is the least we can do," he said. "After all, many of us are successful today because of the school. Contributing is a small way to say 'thank you'."

In 1994, Bernie created the Dr. Bernard S. Aarons Scholarship Endowment with a major charitable remainder trust, and the commitment of a gift in his estate. "I feel honored to do my small part for the dental students of tomorrow."

MCGEORGE ALUMNI

BRIAN L. HINTZ MEMORIAL SCHOLARSHIP FUND

When 32-year-old Brian Hintz was tragically shot to death three years ago, his family, co-workers and friends struggled with their loss. They sought a way to honor the well-liked Sacramento County prosecutor, who graduated from McGeorge in 1989 after entering law school when he was a deputy sheriff. They established the Brian L. Hintz Memorial Scholarship Fund, which annually aids a McGeorge student who has worked in law enforcement and aspires to work as a district attorney.

This year's recipient is Jennifer Avey, a second-year student from Fair Oaks who worked as a community service officer for the Davis Police Department while a student at the University of California, Davis. When Jennifer achieves her goal, working for the Sacramento County District Attorney's office after graduation, she will have truly followed in Brian's footsteps.
