President William E. Davis

The roots of President William E. "Bud" Davis plunge deep into collegiate athletics and the University of New Mexico program has shown healthy growth since his arrival.

Besides occupations like author, senatorial candidate and university president, Dr. Davis has also donned the hats of football player, football coach and referee.

He will start his fourth year at the University of New Mexico on Oct. 1 after having served an 11-year stint as Idaho State University President.

He nearly became a United States Senator in 1972 when he took leave of absence from Idaho State to run for that office. His party nominated him in the primary, but Davis narrowly lost in the general election.

His involvement in collegiate sports started when he played football at the University of Colorado, the alma mater of UNM Head Coach Bill Mondt as well. Davis received his B.S. degree in 1951 after which he entered high school coaching in Rapid City, South Dakota and Loveland, Colo., before returning to CU as director of alumni relations.

In 1962 Davis was named interim head coach for the Buffaloes, an experience he later recounted in his book called "Colorado's Galloping Football Disaster." After losing the whole season, Colorado won the final game against Air Force, and Davis presumed it a perfect time to step down.

The Colorado native then served as faculty representative and assistant to the president of the University of Wyoming before ascending to the Idaho State position.

Athletic Director Lavon McDonald

During Lavon McDonald's five years as New Mexico's athletic director, his commitment to progress has been manifested in the likes of a 2300-seat expansion of University Arena, a tri-level football pressbox and a refurbishing of the football stadium and field. That commitment also recently resulted in the University of New Mexico landing one of the most prestigious sporting events in the United States—the NCAA Basketball Finals.

McDonald headed a delegation that took on Seattle with its 40,000-seat Kingdome and Denver with its pro-mania in the battle for the 1983 NCAA Finals. The decision in July to award the Finals to New Mexico culminated one of the best sports years ever for the Lobos cludes two levels of VIP seating, ranks as one of the finest in America while the beautiful Hy-Play Turf and colorful rubberized asphalt track accent the stadium floor. The Lobo Tennis Club complex is well under way and in 1978-79, UNM will get more money than ever before for its radio-television rights.

A 1948 UNM graduate, McDonald became athletic director on Jan. 1, 1974, succeeding his old high school football coach Pete McDavid.

While a UNM undergraduate, McDonald quarterbacked the 1945 Lobo football team that went to the Sun Bowl and the 1946 team that played in the Harbor Bowl.

with the 24-4 record and Western Athletic Conference championship in basketball being the major highlight. Preparatory to the 1983 Finals, UNM will also host the 1982 West Regionals as it did in 1978 when the nearly 36,000 for the two sessions easily ranked as the biggest crowd for any of the four regionals.

During McDonald's tenure as AD, the Lobos have ranked in the top three each year in basketball attendance, finishing second the past two years to Kentucky with its 25,000-seat arena. UNM topped the 310,000 mark in basketball attendance last season in the 18,100-seat Arena with thousands more being turned away.

The anticipated tongue-lashing had not materialized, and the boys in the Notre Dame locker room were feeling uneasy. Knute Rockne's battered countenance, illumined dimly by an overhead light, seemed almost beatific as he confronted them. He had not assailed them for falling behind in the game, but had commended them, if resignedly, for playing "a great game . . . great game." There was confusion among them as the virtually all-conquering coach conceded, "I guess you just can't expect to win them all." Then he paused, and his eyes searched for something just over their heads. "I'm gonna tell you something I've kept to myself for years," he began. There followed a dramatic pause. "None of you ever knew George Gipp. He was long before your time. But you all know what a tradition he is at Notre Dame. And the last thing he said to me . . . 'Rock,' he said, 'sometime when the team is up against it and the breaks are beating the boys, tell 'em to go out there with all they've got and win just one for The Gipper. I don't know where I'll be then, Rock,' he said, 'but I'll know about it . . . and I'll be happy.'"

Ah yes, win one for The Gipper. It is the climactic scene, of course, from the 1940 film, "Knute Rockne—All-American," featuring Pat O'Brien as the sainted Rock and Ronald Reagan as the short-lived Gipper. The movie is an unabashed tear-jerker, a classic of schmaltz, but it serves to keep alive a tradition and has, in fact, become a tradition in itself, for it is ritualistically shown every year to incoming Notre Dame freshmen as part of their orientation. And it is said that the eyes of the most cynical among the neophytes are awash when old Pat zings them with The Gipper speech. If there was any question about the durability of tradition in college football, the Gipper should dispel it. Still, it might be protested, this is Notre Dame, the citadel of football tradition, the perennial defender of the time-honored against the sallies of the sophisticated.

But how is it explained then that at the University of California at Berkeley, where revolutions are spawned and gray heads are supposed to roll, a former speech professor named Garff Wilson continues to read "The Andy Smith Eulogy," a tribute to a departed coach, at the rally preceding the traditional Big Game with Stanford? In many respects, the Smith Eulogy makes the Gipper speech read like a passage out of Noel Coward, but Wilson was reading it, and students were weeping over it, at the very height of the Free Speech

TRADITION

ABOUT THE AUTHOR—Ron Fimrite, a senior writer for Sports Illustrated, graduated in 1952 from the University of California, where he had served as sports editor for The Daily Californian, the school newspaper. During an 11-year tenure with the San Francisco Chronicle, he was a news reporter five years and sports columnist the last six. He is into his seventh year with SI.

Movement in the 1960s, when all such traditions were supposedly doomed to extinction as vestiges of fascism. Wilson read it then, and Wilson reads it now. Andy Smith is Cal's Gipper.

Tradition survives because it fills a need. It is, in the truest definition, something handed down, a message from the past, a link between the generations. It is perhaps necessary to test tradition from time to time, but it is folly to think that the past can be severed from the present. We are, after all, what we were. The Sixties provided a sore test for our institutions, but they survived it somewhat better than the revolutionaries who threatened them. Most of those zealots are now ap-

Game Rally, the Axe, all of it."

The Axe that McCasey alludes to is the so-called Stanford Axe, which is the winner's trophy in the annual Cal-Stanford Big Game. Like most such symbols, it has a history that dates to the beginnings of the rivalry. The Axe was first swung at an 1899 baseball game between the two universities, where it was employed by Stanford yell leader Billy Erb to behead a dummy Cal Bear. After the game, a gang of Cal men made off with the implement, sawing off the handle so that it would appear less conspicuous. Stanford took it back in 1930 in a robbery as well-planned as any by Dillinger. Posing as newspaper photographers, the Stanford men were clapper and made off with it, thereby silencing one tradition and creating another. Oklahoma surely leads the nation in victory symbols. Besides the Clapper, there is the Bronze Cowboy Hat, dating to 1940, which goes to the winner of the Texas game, and the Peace Pipe, circa 1947, which is smoked by the winner of the O.U.-Missouri game. Football tradition at Oklahoma has never been even remotely threatened by campus revolution. When deans' offices were being occupied by student guerillas in the Sixties, Oklahoma youngsters were still worrying about the Texas game. Football tradition there is, if anything, "stronger than ever," according to one campus spokesman. "Sports seem to produce the only heroes available to students now."

There were political heroes on campus in the 1960s, UPI's Carey was told. Now there are none. Mario Savio and Mark Rudd are unclear shadows from the past. The Big Man on Campus now can most likely turn the 40 in 4.4 and runs the down and out. The tradition of the Football Hero dates at least to F. Scott Fitzgerald's undergraduate years at Princeton before World War I. Fitzgerald, himself a frustrated player, idolized Princeton's football captain, Hobart A.H. (Hobey) Baker, whom he immortalized in his fiction, particularly in This Side of Paradise. Baker was the football player who strode at the head of a column of men singing "Going Back to Nassau" in that novel. He was "slim and defiant, as if aware that this year the hopes of the college rested on him, that his hundred-and-sixty pounds were expected to dodge to victory through the heavy blue and crimson lines." According to Fitzgerald biographer Andrew Turnbull, "Among Fitzgerald's contemporaries there was more hero worship than there is now. Varsity football players were looked upon as demi-gods and 'Hobey' Baker, captain of football and star of hockey—someone like Baker loomed so high in the heavens he was scarcely visible."

At 160, Baker would experience insurmountable difficulty dodging through the somewhat heavier blue and crimson lines of today, but his heftier successors on the gridiron enjoy, if not celestial stature, at least comparable distinction on the modern campus. The Football Hero is himself a tradition. Trophies are named after him, eulogies are composed for him, statues are erected to him and, like the Gipper, his sacred memory is called upon in mo-proaching middle age in anonymity, while the Gipper and Andy Smith march on through time. There is supposedly a new attitude on campus now, or rather a return to an old attitude. "The students are behaving the same as in the '50s," Robert Beyers, Stanford's director of news and publications, told United Press International reporter Robert Carey. "The quiet of the '50s reflected acceptance of society."

It is in times such as these that the football hero has his day. "There's been a definite resurgence of spirit in the last three years," says John McCasey, Cal's sports information director. "Seven years or so ago the football players kept their mouths shut and stayed out of sight. Today, they're very much in the picture. There has been a noticeable return to football traditions—the Big Game Rally, the Axe, all of it." snapping flash bulbs as the Axe was being returned to the American Trust Company in Berkeley after a pep rally. In front of the bank, they exploded tear gas and smoke bombs and wrestled the Axe away from its guardians. Three years later, it was agreed the oft-purloined Axe should become the Big Game trophy. All told, the Axe has been stolen eight times, most recently in 1973 by Stanford men, one of whom posed as the then Cal Coach Mike White.

All victory symbols are stolen as a matter of tradition. The Bell Clapper, which goes to the winner of the Oklahoma-Oklahoma State game, was originally part of a bell on the State campus that was rung after football victories over Oklahoma. In the Twenties, Oklahoma students, enraged by the bell's insulting clamor, severed the

GAME FILMS TELL IT LIKE IT IS

by Tracy Dodds, Milwaukee JOURNAL

Ever try to watch a football game from the sidelines? Don't. It can't be done.

Ever wonder why coaches are hesitant to talk about hows and whys right after a game? Why they are even more hesitant to place blame for plays gone wrong?

That's why.

They're not just stalling when they come up with, "I won't know until after I've seen the films." It's the truth.

A college coach sees his Saturday afternoon game Saturday night or Sunday morning. He sees it on film. And then he sees it again. And again.

When the coaches get the film it's already sliced up. And by the time they get through viewing the game on those slices of film, it's diced up, dissected, analyzed, graded, and oft times computerized.

Nary a move is missed. Every play is evaluated. Every player graded on every single play.

For every hour that the players sweat through those telltale pictures, the coaches spend four or five sitting before the screen.

That's with their own film. Then there's the film of the next guy on the schedule. That's to be dealt with on Sunday, too. And Monday and Tuesday, and sometimes even on into the week, depending upon how the coaches choose to use film. But they all use it. It's vital.

A Big Ten coach who has coached in the Missouri Valley Conference, the Atlantic Coast Conference, and at Florida State and the Naval Academy was asked about the time coaches spend looking at film. "Uncountable hours," he said. "Everywhere. Even in the high schools now. You use it to make up a Bible, and you live by that Bible all week."

Most coaches watch the films straight through the first time, to see what went right and what went wrong. Then they go over the offensive films with their offensive coaches and analyze plays, play selections, and personnel. And they go over the defensive film with the defensive coaches the same way.

Then the offensive coaches go over and over the offensive film and, by position, the position coaches grade their charges on every play. They re-evaluate personnel. Because with the film, they have a chance to take a close look, replay after replay, at how their players did against live competition, and, therefore, how the No. 2 man compared to the No. 1 man against the same opponent.

Same with the defensive coaches.

They use their findings to plan their practices—to make up that Bible that tells them what needs to be worked on or changed, what still needs to be taught.

All of that has to be done immediately, because when the players report—usually Sunday afternoon or evening—the coaches have to be ready to use that film to teach. They use their findings and the film to show the players how they did. They show the films and they show reruns of the films, and for the players on the spot, it's either the best movie they've ever seen—featuring themselves in the starring role—or it's a horror show. Nothing hides.

"It'll show up on the films," the players say. No use making excuses after a missed assignment or a route run wrong. No sense saying that lineman was handled if he wasn't. By Sunday night, there will be no doubt.

But that's just half the Bible. That's just the Gospel according to Us. There's another Bible to be written: the Gospel according to Them.

Also on Sunday, the coaches have in their hands the film from the day before from their next opponent. That, too, is broken down onto offensive and defensive reels. The offensive coaches take the defensive reels and the defensive coaches take the offensive reels. That's when the real work begins.

They start breaking down that film the same way—plays, play selections, tendencies, strengths and weaknesses of individual players. They draw the plays, name the plays, study the plays. They chart the play selections and diagram the tendencies.

They add the new film and new findings to the information gleaned from films of that team from the two previous weeks—film that was already in—so that they are working with the films of the last three games of the upcoming foe.

Those total findings are likely to be fed into a computer, so that come next Saturday, the defensive coaches can anticipate plays in any given situation. And the offensive coaches can count on a percentage of defensive breakdowns, a ments of peril. We may not mythify him as we once did, but we still need him at the head of our parades.

Not every tradition survives intact, of course. The Indian as mascot was massacred in the revolutions of the Sixties. Stanford teams are now the Cardinals, which is really not that much of a departure from tradition, since they were the Cardinals the years before they were Indians. As Indians, they had an identity, a mascot, so the name seemed preferable to the Cardinals, which referred not the bird but to the school colors. When it was decided that naming teams after ethnic groups was offensive, the Cardinal sobriquet was simply revived. Oklahoma's teams were never called "Indians," but they did have a "Little Red" mascot, and he, too, was a casualty of the Sixties wars. Most significantly, the college bands have been transformed in some schools, particularly those in the Ivy League and in California, from traditional military marching units to something more closely resembling strolling players. The Stanford band, for one, is more indebted to Spike Jones than John Philip Sousa for its repertoire. Bands such as these seem to be flying in the face of sacred tradition, particularly when juxtaposed with more convention aggregations, but the musicians still march—in a fashion—and they still play the old fight songs.

No fight song is more stirring than the Notre Dame Victory March, although Michigan's "The Victors" is a serious contender. The Victory March is background music for Rockne-O'Brien's Gipper address. It is played, for that matter, in virtually every movie about college football, even those in which Notre Dame has no part. The very mention of the university calls it to mind and brings it to lips. Notre Dame students are still stirred on the eve of big games when the school band begins its early evening march across campus to round up rooters for the Friday night pep rallies. Tradition dies hard in South Bend. The rallies are no longer held in the old Field House, but at the Stephan Center. Still, the older building, site of so many rousing celebrations, has survived the wrecker's ball, largely through the intervention of students eager to keep it standing as a monument to tradition.

Traditions can expire and then be revived. And this can happen more than once. In the 1940s, when her teams ran roughshod over the opposition under the leadership of Frank Leahy, Notre Dame's Fighting Irish wore green jerseys. Johnny Lujack, Emil Sitko, Creighton Miller, Leon Hart, George Connor—all gained celebrity with the wearing of the green. The teams did not shift full-time to blue until 1956. That sartorial switch represented not so much a departure from tradition as a return to it, for blue and gold, not green and gold, are the school colors and the pre-Leahy teams wore blue. But subway alumni identified more strongly with a color traditionally associated with the Irish and they lamented its passing. No matter, old tradition won out over the new.

So now we have last year's USC-Notre Dame game. The Irish-Trojan game is surely one of the classic matchups in college football. National champions frequently emerge from the dust of such encounters. Both teams were again considered to be top contenders last year for the championship, although Notre Dame lost early in the campaign. Another loss, to the then undefeated Trojans, would be critical to the team's aspirations, Coach Dan Devine concluded, so Rockne-like measures were indicated. Devine had no Gipper at his disposal—you can't follow an act like that—but he needed something to inspire his charges to a Gipperized effort. Then he hit upon it.

Cineastes will recall that after O'Brien delivered his Gipper speech, the players remained mute for some time. Then one of their number—an anonymous chattel from Central Casting—rose dramatically and shouted, "Well, what are we waiting for!" And the locker room erupted with cheers. The poor Army team didn't have a chance that day. Before the 'SC game last year, the Notre Dame players warmed up in their traditional blue and gold uniforms. But when they returned to the locker room, they discovered that fresh new green jerseys had been laid out for them. Notre Dame men know their traditions. These were the uniforms of the old champions, of Lujack and the other legendary heroes. There was once again that familiar silence, then, presumably, someone not from Central Casting rose and shouted, "Well, what are we waiting for!" And this room, too, erupted in cheers. The poor Southern California team didn't have a chance that day. Tradition had struck again.

Fitzgerald, the Hobey Baker fan, expressed it best in the last sentence of The Great Gatsby: "So we beat on, boats against the current, borne back ceaselessly into the past."

Year one was 1959. Since then we've sold more imported pickups than anyone else. For good reasons: choice; value; quality. You've discovered that because we demand excellence, you get one heck of a truck. And constant Datsun refinements. Like road levelling ball joints, torsion bars and leaf springs for a smoother ride. And you've made us number one because we make the right truck for the right job. Like the exclusive King Cab. Only pickup with reclining bucket seats; only small pickup with up to 11.3 cubic feet of lockable storage space behind those buckets.

Or maybe the Datsun Standard — is right for you. Stretch has a bed nearly 7-1/2 feet long. Both haul 1400 pounds of people and cargo. Both feature Datsun's reliable 2-litre engine, transistorized ignition, power front disc brakes — all standard! Get the truck you want and the quality you need from your neighborhood expert: your Datsun dealer. He's been selling the No. 1 imported pickup for 19 straight years. # PLUGGING THE GAPS:

The Buddy System of Defense

by Edgar Allen, Nashville BANNER

Offensive football is assignment football. Defensive football is reaction football. One mistake can cost a team a football game.

That's the reason college defenses are considerably more sophisticated than they've ever been before. They've had to keep up with constantly changing offensive formations and innovations.

But the fundamentals remain; the necessity to do the right things in the right way at the right time. The key to any winning defense is still teamwork. Communication between the defensive players is the vital link between theory and execution; as the players come to know their assignments, they come to rely more upon each other. The communication and reaction combine to plug all the gaps, and create a true Buddy System of defense.

"Errors on defense can't be tolerated," says one famous Southeastern Conference coach. "One mistake on defense can cost a team a game. In order to eliminate errors, you must always have the strength of your defense against the strength of the offense. The defensive players must be positioned in such a way that the team as a whole can handle any situation that might arise. The primary goal, of course, is not to let them score."

It might be a verbal shout or bark, or a hand movement or a pat on the seat of the pants, but signals between members of the defensive unit have never been so vital as in today's action.

"You might say our life depends on it," said one of the more intelligent All-America linebackers recently. "That is, our life in the matter of winning football games. You learn to expect signals and listen for a call from a buddy that tells you what he's going to do and what he expects you to do."

ABOUT THE AUTHOR—Edgar Allen is in his 36th year with the Nashville Banner sports staff and has served as the paper's sports editor since 1968. He is the outgoing president of the U.S. Basketball Writers Association and 1st Vice President of the Football Writers Association of America. Voted Tennessee's top sportswriter three times, Allen considers himself a product of the Grantland Rice school of sports journalism. "When I was a freshman, I thought I knew about all there was to backing up the line. Before the season was half over, I realized how little I knew. But by the time I was a senior, I came to depend on just about everybody around me. College defense is an eleven man proposition."

"Plugging the gaps," that's what defensive coaches everywhere try to teach. "Whether it's the veer or I or whatever, you are trying to stop what your opponent is best at," says one veteran defensive specialist of a perennial national power.

"You have to give up something. But if you can stop their bread and butter, it can change the whole tempo of the game and make them do things they don't want to do. Then whoever makes the most mistakes is going to lose the football game."

"Containment is the name of the game," he continued. "We expect our front people—our down linemen—to take care of the inside. Our linebackers are expected to run from sideline to sideline, so they should make a lot of tackles."

"If our ends and interior front are doing their job, they'll make the tackle or squeeze the football back inside toward the linebackers. As the football goes outside, we do expect them to clear the way and take care of pulling line blockers and others and enable the linebackers to make the tackle."

There are hundreds of signals between linebackers and down linemen, linebacker and secondary, cornerback and safety, etc., during the course of a game.

"We have every kind of communication you can think of," said an ACC coach whose team was a national leader last Fall in total defense.

"After the team lines up in its offensive set, we might have several signals passed. Most are verbal, but it might even be a linebacker, who has a better vantage point standing up, stepping up and patting a tackle's rear on the left or right, depending on the direction he wishes him to charge."

One famous coach has a simple numbering system that enables linebackers to talk to both guards and tackles.

For example, if the linebacker calls "25," it means for the guard to play a 2 technique and the tackle a 5 technique. The techniques might be moving into the split, lining up head-on, slanting one way or the other, or whatever. The linebacker calls the defense for his particular side of the line.

The point of defensive football is keeping the other team from scoring, so the Buddy System is needed most at the goal line.

He controls himself and his guard and tackle, but not the end on his side of the line. The end is controlled by the defensive signal caller in the secondary who gives a call for that alignment.

"Our system is the simplest one I know of for getting players into various defenses quickly with a minimum amount of talking," said the coach, who discarded a "name" identification of defenses for this simpler plan more than 15 years ago. "It eliminates confusion and we have found the players take a great deal of pride in learning only a few techniques, which they are able to execute well. The simpler you make it, the better it is for everybody—coaches and players, too."

The Buddy System extends beyond the linebacker and front linemen. Ah, yes. It is more prevalent between linebackers and secondary than anywhere else.

"There's constant communication between everybody behind the line," says an assistant from the Midwest. "From the time the offense lines up until the play is over, it's vital that they react to the ball and let others know what's going on.

"Maybe a tight end will flex out five yards or so, or two wide receivers go to the same side, or you want to double cover some split end, or use part zone pass coverage and part man-to-man. Everybody has to know what's happening or you'd have chaos."

The coming of the triple option, the veer, wishbone, and other modifications has intensified the need for quick reaction and communication after the ball is snapped.

"There's no doubt the triple option has made defense tougher," said a long-time aide. "You've got to cover the dive, the quarterback, and the pitch. Each time the defense changes, you've got to know who has each responsibility."

For sure, college football is more complicated than it ever has been before. But for every new offensive wrinkle, some enterprising defensive coach will come up with a solution. And the Buddy System will get stronger and stronger.

likelihood of what defenses will show up, what players will likely be substituted on a goal line stand or a pass play situation.

Once the coaches have the book on the next guys, they start showing it to the players. And the projectors flicker on and on for days.

Every player gets to know the men he'll go against. Players view and review film by the hours. Especially defensive backs and linebackers. They watch for their "reads" and they memorize routes.

Ask a player about the All-America superstar he'll be facing in the next game. He won't know the guy's name. But he'll know his number. He'll know how many stickers the guy has on his helmet. And he'll know how the guy turns a corner or how he looks just before he passes to his right.

And even the scout team players have to spend hours with film. If they are to recreate on the field the moves of the opponents, they have to know those moves pretty well.

Nothing boils the blood of a coaching staff like having an opponent "accidentally" misplace film or "through extenuating circumstances" get exchange film in late.

It upsets the entire week of preparation—a grievous setback. So the sin of not coming through with the film is equally grievous. There are rules to guard against such things, and each school has a film contract with each school on its schedule.

The contract specifies the times and places for the exchanges, the deadlines, the responsibility for returning the valuable film, the responsibility for its condition. Most schools have a "film coach," one member of the staff who is ultimately responsible for getting the film in and out on schedule.

And when the major colleges spend more than $20,000 a year on film, that's no mean task. Most film crews will use two cameras—one television style for highlights and overview and one for clinical evaluation.

While they are still shooting the game, runners are taking the film, quarter by quarter, to the lab to be developed. They need a head start because the development process takes seven to eight hours.

Standard procedure is to print a color version of the television style to be used for booster clubs and promotional highlight films. Quick highlights for immediate use in television spots are spliced out, copied, and spliced back in.

A color master of the clinical film would go to the home coach, as soon as possible. (So that he can see the game that everyone else saw that afternoon.)

Several black and white sets of clinical films are made. The first ones are for the home coaching staff and for the exchange with the next opponent. That exchange set would either be picked up or put on the earliest plane. Two more sets are put in the mail, or on a bus, to arrive midweek at the offices of the two subsequent opponents.

All sets are broken down into offense and defense. And all are broken down by quarters. So a complete set consists of eight reels—four quarters of offense and four quarters of defense. Those are 400 foot reels.

Sometimes the film crew has extra sets to make. Say, if the game has been selected in advance for review of the officials by a conference office.

Films became more important in the 1976 and 1977 seasons when the National Collegiate Athletic Association ruled out scouting expenses, but allowed all expenses to be paid for exchanges of film.

But there were objections from the coaches because of the kinds of things that films do not tell—team speed, enthusiasm, sideline adjustments, sideline organization, time out procedures, who talks to whom on the sideline, crowd reaction.

So for the 1978 season, scouting was reinstated, but for one game only. A scout can attend the game immediately preceding the scheduled game with his team.

When a scout is on the scene, it becomes his responsibility to wait for the game film to be processed, so that he can personally see it safely back to his school.

Would the home office rather see the scout arrive without the film? Or the film arrive without the scout?

Bet on the film.

All coaches spend hours in the film room, analyzing seemingly endless reels of game action over and over.

If it's action you're after, Nikon has a choice of compacts for you.

You see them in action at every major sports and news event—the professionals with their motor-driven Nikon cameras. They know they can rely on Nikon to get the picture, every time.

You can, too, with a Nikon "compact." The moderately priced semi-automatic Nikon FM or the fully automatic Nikon FE. Both are a lot smaller and lighter than the pros' cameras but engineered with the same Nikon precision. And, they handle with a speed and ease any pro could envy.

Each has a built-in electronic meter system that gives you superb exposures with professional accuracy. With the FM, it's done in one quick, simple step; a bright 5-stage LED light signal in the viewfinder makes it virtually foolproof. With the FE, the meter does it automatically, and a quick-responding needle indicator keeps you informed about exposure. You simply aim, focus and shoot.

Add the low-cost motor drive to either camera and feel the excitement of true high-performance photography at up to 3.5 shots a second. Get close to the action with a Nikkor telephoto lens, or take in more of the field with a Nikkor wide angle (the same magnificently sharp lenses the pros swear by).

There's no end to the great photography you can do with a Nikon compact. It begins with your visit to your Nikon dealer (he's listed in the Yellow Pages). Ask him also about the traveling Nikon School. Or write to Nikon Inc., Dept. N-4, Garden City, New York 11530. Subsidiary of

Head Coach Bill Mondt has seen his original freshman class graduate as he enters his fifth season at New Mexico and he is totally committed to producing consistent winners from here on out.

Since taking over in December of 1973, Mondt has brought an explosive, exciting brand of football to New Mexico, but only in 1975, when the Lobos went 6-5, has he had a winning season. His hard work is due to pay off in 1978.

Mondt, 41, has a four-year record of 19-25-1 at UNM including last year's 5-7 mark. A hard-luck schedule, in which the Lobos opened the season with four games on the road—three of them to nationally ranked teams—kept the Lobos' heads down through the first half of the 1977 season. But when they were finally allowed up for air, the Lobos won four of their last seven and three of their last five games to set the stage for 1978.

When Mondt took over in 1973 he promised—if nothing else—to bring wide open football to New Mexico. He installed the pro-set offense and brought in record-setting passer Steve Myer, who set all the career records in just 17 games. Mondt kept his pledge through last year as Mike Williams rolled to his second 1000-yard season despite missing the final two games with a knee injury. At the same time, quarterback Noel Mazzone was threatening the school total offense record and Preston Dennard was tacking on more numbers to the career receiving records he grabbed during his junior season.

New Mexico had never had a football first team All-American before Mondt arrived—now they have one. Lobo professional draft choices were few and far between, but in 1977 alone, four Lobos were picked in the first nine rounds of the NFL draft including 1st round selection Robin Cole.

Top New Mexico players, who have in past years gone to other schools to play football, have now begun to flock to Coach Mondt's program. Before Mondt became head coach there were six New Mexico athletes listed on the Lobo depth chart. Currently there are 24 New Mexicans on the UNM varsity roster and an additional 10 more on the freshman team.

Mondt ascended to the head coaching job at New Mexico from the position of chief assistant to Rudy Feldman, now with the St. Louis Cardinals. He had been Feldman's first assistant in 1968 and served as offensive coordinator in 1970 and 1971 when New Mexico was second in the nation in both rushing and total offense, averaging 468 yards a game. He was defensive coordinator for Feldman in 1972.

COLLEGIATE RECORD:

HONORS RECEIVED: 1958 Academic All Big Eight; 1958 Captain, Colorado University football team

Mondt had come to New Mexico with Feldman after leaving coaching for a year. He worked as a development engineer for the Samsonite Company. Feldman's call to Loboland ended Mondt's one year as a non-coach.

Mondt was captain at Colorado of the 1958 Buff squad. He started 25 of a possible 31 games under Coach Dal Ward as an offensive guard and defensive tackle. He was Academic All-Big Eight (he majored in mechanical engineering) and started on Colorado's 1957 Orange Bowl champion team. In Mondt's three years as a player, Colorado enjoyed some of its finest football success, going 21-8-1.

Upon graduation from Colorado, Mondt entered coaching at Washington High in Kansas as an assistant. He left there for the head coaching job at Academy High in Colorado Springs. His first team won the Class AA state championship. In his three years at Academy, Mondt's teams were 26-5.

Mondt then went to Colorado where he and Feldman were assistants to Eddie Crowder for two years before joining Samsonite.

Mondt's first team at New Mexico—with Myer—went 4-6-1, Myer missing the last five games after leading the nation in passing. In 1975 the Lobos won five of their last six games to end 6-5 and third in the WAC. The 1976 team lost six of its final seven games to end 4-7. After losing four of its first five games, the 1977 team wound up 5-7.

Mondt is a native of small Kersey, Colorado. He married the former JoAnn Wagner of nearby Greeley and they have two teenaged daughters, Tracy and Terry. Mondt is an avid golfer, shooting in the 80s.

Lobo Weight Training

MIKE WILLIAMS

Conditioning and physical strength of the UNM athletes are in the hands of Pete Martinelli, the Lobo strength coach and a two-time All-American power lifter.

Martinelli, 29, is in his fourth year as head of New Mexico's strength program, one of the first of its kind in the nation. It remains one of the best equipped with the latest in Nautilus equipment, and determined Lobo athletes spend countless grueling hours welding their bodies into shape.

Martinelli turned into a weight lifter when a knee injury forced him out of basketball at Tularosa, N.M. High. After lifting for a while, he surprised everyone by walking out and finishing fifth in the state shot put championships.

He never had a weight coach and facilities were bleak while he was at UNM, but he finished third in the NCAA power lifting competition as a junior and senior, obtaining All-America honors both years.

He majored in physical education before obtaining a master's degree from UNM in 1973, doing his thesis on biomechanics. He has studied the Russian lifting techniques and has incorporated many of their successful ideas into the UNM plan.

In 1975 he won the National Junior Power Lifting Championship after finishing fifth in the Senior Division in 1972.

Martinelli and his wife Barbara have been married four years.

RCA ColorTrak for 1979

Getting the color right, automatically. That's what ColorTrak is all about.

Automatic color control and flesh-tone correction
Holds flesh-tones and other colors to the settings you select—even when TV signal varies or you change channels.

Automatic light sensor
Adjusts for changing room light to give you a rich, detailed picture day or night.

RCA energy-efficient XtendedLife chassis
Designed to run cooler, perform better and last longer than any previous RCA chassis.

RCA Super AccuFilter picture tube
RCA's most advanced picture tube has specially tinted phosphors that absorb room light to keep colors sharp and vivid.

Now more automatic than ever with ChannelLock electronic tuning

Select any station. RCA's new ChannelLock tuner instantly computes the exact station frequency and locks on to the right channel. Smoothly. Silently. Precisely. Its secret is a tiny quartz crystal that generates a steady electronic reference signal. The result: a tuner so accurate you'll never have to fine-tune a channel again. Ever.

ChannelLock Keyboard Control

Tune in any channel from 2 to 83 with this calculator-type keyboard control panel. The touch of two buttons is all it takes. Channel number appears in a bright L.E.D. read-out.

ChannelLock Remote Scan Control

Sophisticated remote unit lets you turn set on and off, adjust volume, and cycle active channels—all from across the room. Time of day and channel number appear on screen with every channel change or volume adjustment.

Today's Game...

THE WAC THIS WEEK

BRIGHAM YOUNG at UTAH
West Virginia at COLORADO STATE
WYOMING at Hawaii
TEXAS-EL PASO at Nevada-Las Vegas
Pacific at NEW MEXICO
SAN DIEGO STATE at Miami (Florida)

1978 SCHEDULES

	Pacific 4-6	UNM 6-4
Sept. 9	at Arizona State (7-42)	at Hawaii (16-22)
Sept. 16	UC Davis (14-31)	at Wichita St. (16-14)
Sept. 23	at California (6-24)	Nevada-Las Vegas (24-0)
Sept. 30	Long Beach State (14-0)	Brigham Young (23-27)
Oct. 7	Fullerton State (35-17)	at Wyoming (19-15)
Oct. 14	at Fresno State (27-7)	Texas Tech (23-36)
Oct. 21	at San Diego State (28-31)	New Mexico St. (35-20)
Oct. 28	at Hawaii (27-17)	at Texas-El Paso (21-0)
Nov. 4	at Utah State (14-40)	at Utah (24-12)
Nov. 11	San Jose State (31-33)	Colorado St. (15-26)
Nov. 18	at New Mexico	Pacific
Nov. 25	Colorado State	at San Diego St.

The University of the Pacific Tigers have lost seven straight day games coming into this contest, and the Lobos have nothing in mind but to hand them their eighth.

This is the first meeting ever between Pacific and New Mexico, but the two seem like old friends considering the WAC opponents the Tigers have on their schedule. Besides UNM, Pacific has played San Diego State, already this year (SDS won 33-31) and will meet Colorado State next week. In addition the Tigers have met incoming WAC member Hawaii (Pacific won 27-17) and outgoing member Arizona State (ASU won 42-7).

Two of the nation's leading passers will be looking across the field at each other, as Pacific boasts senior Bruce Parker, who is currently 24th in the nation with 12.1 completions per game, and UNM will counter with sophomore Brad Wright who is 27th in the country in passing with 11.8 completions per game.

Wright, despite having a below average game against CSU last week, remains sixth in the nation in total offense with 221.8 yards per game. He needs just 49 yards today to pass the UNM sophomore total offense record of 2,044 yards set by Noel Mazzone in 1976. With a good game today, Wright could challenge the UNM season record of 2,369 yards set by Steve Myer in 1975. Myer now plays for the NFL Seattle Seahawks.

Keep a close eye on senior fullback Mike Williams today because when he goes over 24 yards rushing he will be the alltime leading career rusher in the Western Athletic Conference. He needs just 24 yards to tie Woody Green, who rushed for 3,754 yards at Arizona State from 1971-73.

Also keep a watch out for safety Doug Smith, who as a sophomore is tied for the WAC lead in interceptions with six.

Pacific's leaders include Parker and tailback Richard Phillips who rushed for 134 yards on 21 carries last week against San Jose State. The Tigers lost to SJS when the Spartans threw a touchdown pass with no time remaining.

Lobo Grid Quiz

1. When was the last time a UNM football team won seven straight games?
2. Who kicked the longest punt in UNM history and how far did it travel?
3. Ricky Martin has caught some long passes this year, one going for 80 yards and a TD. Can you remember the longest pass play in Lobo history—who threw it and who caught it?
4. What record would this year's team have to accomplish for the alltime UNM football slate to go over the .500 mark?
5. Max Hudspeth is averaging about 40 yards per punt this season. What is the school record for punting average in a single season and who set it?
6. Don Perkins is one of the most famous players out of the University of New Mexico. How many career yards did he rush for and where does that rank on the alltime UNM list?
7. Who holds the UNM record for career touchdowns?

1. In the 1927-28 seasons.
2. Jim Haynes booted a punt 79 yards against BYU in 1975.
3. Rick Bellier threw an 89-yard pass to Emilio Valdez against Arizona in 1966—the longest pass play in the UNM record books.
4. A 9-3 record this season would give the Lobos an alltime record of 304 wins, 303 losses and 30 ties.
5. A. L. Terpening averaged 45.6 yards per kick in 1954.
6. Perkins rushed for 2001 yards in 1957-59 and ranks fourth on the UNM list behind Mike Williams, Fred Henry and Rocky Long.
7. Mike Williams, who had 26 following the Utah game.

We sing to honor thee
This golden haze of college days
Will live in memory,
This praise we sing will ever ring
With truth and loyalty,
New Mexico, your fame we know
Will last eternally.*

NCAA Football Trivia

Mississippi State recorded the largest per-game increase in Division I football last season—12,465, bringing its home average to 39,400. Miami (Fla.) was next at 12,404 to bring its average to 29,640 (on a percentage basis, Miami was up 72.0 per cent to 46.3 per cent for Mississippi State). Next was Florida State, up 11,479 to 39,403, then Florida, up 8,437 to 62,636; Arizona State, up 8,434 to 56,837; Tulane, up 8,424 to 34,871; Wichita State, up 8,347 to 20,844 and Hawaii, up 8,160 to 28,396.

If you're wondering whether scholarship limits are leveling off major-college football, consider this: For the first time in 10 years and for only the sixth time in 50 years, there were no undefeated-untied teams left after the bowls. Texas was the only perfect-record team in the regular season, and the Longhorns were beaten 38-10 in the Cotton Bowl by Notre Dame, which then was voted national champion. Four other teams went bowling with the only perfect record in the country (during the last 50 years) and were beaten—Wyoming after the 1967 season, Maryland (1953), Tulsa (1942), and Tulane (1931). The sixth time? In 1936 there were no regular-season U-U teams.

The winningest major-college team over the last 25 years? Ohio State, with a .790 percentage (183-46-7).

Oklahoma is a close second at .785 (200-53-5) and is the only team with a 8.0 wins per season. Next are Penn State .761, Arizona State .759, Alabama .748, Texas .746 and Notre Dame .713.

Purely in won-lost terms for its combined opponents, Miami (Fla.) played the toughest schedule of any major-college team in 1977. Miami's opponents compiled a .609 winning percentage (66-42-2) when not playing Miami, nudging Penn State's .608. Next were Mississippi State .605, Utah State .603, Pittsburgh .591, Navy .585, SMU .582, Southern Mississippi .579 and Northwestern and Baylor each at .577. Miami's schedule included Notre Dame, Alabama, Ohio State, Penn State and Florida State—five bowl teams, four of which won. Impressive as this is, it doesn't match Missouri's incredible 1976 schedule. Opponents were .680 (74-34-3) in regular season when not playing the Tigers and seven of them went to bowls, five winning.

If you define a cliff-hanger as a game in which the winning score came in the last half of the last quarter (7½ minutes left or less), there were 119 cliff-hangers in major-college football in 1977, or 14 more than in 1976. A total of 34 games were decided with less than a minute to go, including nine with less than 10 seconds left on the clock.

5, 10, 25 Years Ago in College Football

NOVEMBER 17, 1973

Bob Berg, a perennial walk-on at Sandia (Albuquerque) High and New Mexico because of his 5-9, 150-pound size, finally got a taste of what heroes feel like. The sophomore plopped a 43-yard field goal (barely) over the cross bar as time expired for a 23-21 victory over Wyoming in University Stadium. Berg, a 3.31-grade student and an accomplished artist who kicks with an inexpensive tennis shoe tied back at the toe, went on to hit a record 73.2 per cent of his career attempts (41 of 56) for UNM.

NOVEMBER 16, 1968

There weren't many dry eyes in the Oregon State dressing room. The Beavers, who had top-rated Southern Cal on the ropes, were feeling the heartbreak of a 17-13 loss that could have been a win. OSU, which wasted golden scoring opportunities, was in command 7-0 in the Coliseum and driving when a pass interception at the 13-minute mark of the final period shifted momentum to the Trojans. O. J. Simpson, who gained 238 yards in 47 tries, soon clinched USC's third straight trip to the Rose Bowl with a 40-yard TD gallop that broke Oregon State's resistance.

NOVEMBER 14, 1953

Captained by 180-pound tackle Chuck Knox, later an NFL Coach of the Year with the Los Angeles Rams, Juniata defeated Ursinus, 21-0, at Huntington in a contest billed as the "Pennsylvania small-college game of the week." The win gave 7-0 Juniata its first perfect season and the first leg of its Glory Years (1953-59) during which the Indians were 50-2-2, including a 27-game undefeated streak.

ENERGY

Good athletes know that conserving a little energy for that crucial goal line stand can often make the difference between winning and losing.

Conserving all forms of energy is a wise goal for everyone. In doing so, we not only help save valuable resources—we also save money on our energy bill.

ALL-AMERICANS IN THE CLASSROOM

by David Davidson, Atlanta JOURNAL

Does a diploma really make a difference? One can hardly imagine a sheepskin would have helped Bobby Dodd, who never completed his degree after an All-America career as a single-wing tailback at Tennessee, win more games once he became head football coach at Georgia Tech. Between 1945 and 1966, Dodd's teams won 165 games and tied eight, while losing only 64.

But while not receiving his degree might not have affected his won-lost record, it did have a significant impact on Dodd's outlook where the academic well-being of his players was concerned. Proof positive doesn't exist, but it would be a safe wager that the percentage of Dodd's players who received their diplomas at Tech exceeded his winning percentage on the football field. Having his players graduate became almost an obsession, like the mother who failed at ballet who pushes her daughter to be a prima ballerina.

In fact, the story Dodd most likes to repeat for banquet audiences is academic-oriented:

"I remember this one player in particular," the story goes. "He was a stud—6-4, 225 pounds—and back then that was big. Quick, fast, good hands, a perfect specimen for an end."

"Well, he came to Tech, but he couldn't play the first year because of a bad knee," Dodd continues. "We had that operated on and just when it looked like he was going to be able to help us he hurt his other knee. So we had that one operated on, then he hurt his shoulder."

ALL-AMERICANS IN THE CLASSROOM

"Four years went by," Dodd moans, "and he hadn't so much as put on a varsity uniform. So my academic counselor came to me and said, 'Bobby, this kid has never played a lick and he's never going to graduate. He isn't even close. There's no reason to keep him on scholarship.'"

"But I told him if the boy wanted to keep trying, I'd keep him on scholarship. After his fifth year the boy still hadn't graduated and my academic man came back to me and said, 'Bobby, this boy is dumber than you are. He'll never graduate. You're wasting money keeping him on scholarship.'"

"But I said the boy was doing his best," Dodd says, "and that we'd keep him on scholarship. And finally, after six years, the boy graduated," Dodd concludes. "And do you know who that boy is today? He's my son-in-law, J.L. Thompson."

Maybe Thompson would have been a success in business and been elected to the Georgia Senate without his degree. Then again, maybe not.

Regardless, the academic side of collegiate football is a topic of serious scrutiny across the nation. With academic standards becoming increasingly more demanding, the image of the "dumb jock" has come under correspondingly heavy criticism.

On the one hand, a survey sponsored by the National Collegiate Athletic Association between 1968 and 1973 showed that 77 percent of the football players who enrolled as freshmen at the schools which responded actually attained their degrees. Surveys made in 1957, '62, '68, '71, and '72 by the American College Testing Program (ACT) found that 60 percent of the men and women who entered college actually were graduated with baccalaureate degrees.

"I think it's accurate to say lettermen do graduate at least at the same rate as other males in the student body, and additional data seem to indicate the graduation rate is higher for lettermen than the male student body," concluded James Maxey, director of research services for ACT.

The NCAA certainly does its part to accentuate the academic side of collegiate football. Since its postgraduate scholarship program was initiated in 1964, 441 scholarships worth up to $1,500 each (a total of $490,500) have been awarded to football athletes with outstanding undergraduate academic records. (In all sports, the NCAA has awarded 1,024 scholarships, with a total value over a million dollars.) In cooperation with Chevrolet, which sponsors the NCAA's televised games each Saturday, another 600 scholarship donations worth a total of $650,000 have been made to the general scholarship funds at schools ranging in scope from Southern Cal and Ohio State to Chico State and Tennessee Tech, all in the name of outstanding offensive and defensive players in those games. Penn State, in fact, has received $24,000 in general scholarship fund grants.

One prominent, and independently wealthy coach in the Deep South contributed $150,000 of his own money to his school's general scholarship fund. Additionally, the National Football Foundation Scholar-Athlete Awards give recognition to players with excellent academic credentials; there is the Academic All-America team sponsored by the College Sports Information Directors Association; and, ultimately, the Rhodes Scholar program, which has recognized the likes of Supreme Court Justice Byron (Whizzer) White, and more recently Pat Haden.

On the other hand, a study made in 1976 by a Los Angeles attorney, Richard M. Coleman, seems to indicate the best players at schools with the biggest names in college football graduate at a rate of less than 50 percent. Coleman drew his conclusions by reviewing the 1975 Football Register from the Sporting News, which listed all veteran players in both the National Football League and the now-defunct World Football League. The list did not include rookies, thus taking most of the validity out of the argument that many players return to college to get their degrees in the year after their eligibility ends.

Coleman found that 51 schools had 10 or more players on the rosters of professional football teams, but only 13 of those institutions had a graduation rate higher than 50 percent. Notre Dame, Penn State, Michigan, Utah State, California, Wisconsin, and Boston College were among the schools with graduation rates that could be considered a credit to the institution. Others, however, were a disgrace. One major football conference as a whole, for instance, had only 30 diplomas to show for 135 players in pro football, a shameful 22 percent.

"I think we are regressing a great deal," warned Dr. Boyd McWhorter, commissioner of the Southeastern Conference. "I would say as many as 50 percent of the college football players today would not qualify under the old

by Dick Fishback, Honolulu ADVERTISER

Beautiful Aloha Stadium, built in 1975, has helped Hawaii with scheduling, helped them gain admission to the Western Athletic Conference, and will be the site of a second postseason bowl game (the Pineapple Bowl, to join the all-star game Hula Bowl).

The rushing splash of deep blue water turning emerald green as it spreads on a white sand beach.

The haunting melodies of old Hawaii playing on the rolling chords of a ukulele.

The leggy beauty of a Chinese-Hawaiian girl uncurling on a grass mat to accept the rays of an 85-degree sun.

The warm but gentle tradewind breeze blowing through the palm trees as moonlight is mirrored on a placid sea.

Irresistible? Certainly!

Such are the images of the islands of the South Pacific. While most reaches of the United States and their football teams are shivering through games in late Fall afternoons or chilling nights, the Rainbows of the University of Hawaii are lathering through a balmy schedule of mostly home games in Honolulu.

The university that is situated in the cool Manoa Valley in Honolulu on the island of Oahu annually beckons some of the best football competition in the nation.

So the job of scheduling games at this Pacific paradise must be a piece of cake, right? Not quite. It's easier now and will become easier when Hawaii becomes a member of the Western Athletic Conference on July 1, 1979. But it hasn't always been that way.

Believe it or not, there's been a football program at the island university since 1909. But it wasn't until 1920 that the Rainbows were able to beckon a Mainland university (Nevada-Reno) across the 2,200 miles of ocean. And the Nevadans returned the favor by blanketing the 'Bows, 14-0.

There were splatters of collegiate opponents through the years, as many as eight in 1947 or 1950.

But the stark reality of finances began to tell on the schedule until a winsome,

$1,500-a-year coach and athletic director (1952-60) by the name of Henry "Hank" Vasconcellos dreamed up a plan to make it financially possible for an incoming team to absorb some of the costs of the trip.

Although it isn't generally known, the game played in the Islands doesn't count against a school's season limit as spelled out by the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

In plain terms, that means that a team can play a 12th game in the Islands at the present time, one more than the continental United States limit of 11. The concession also allows incoming basketball teams to play three games above the limit in that sport (30 rather than 27).

Frustration had originally prompted Vasconcellos to submit his amendment to the NCAA. He decided to petition after a West Coast university cancelled

We can't afford to run out of ideas.

Make America smarter. Give to the college of your choice.

A shortage becomes a crisis only when there is a shortage of trained minds to solve it. And for today's manifold shortages, that means college-trained minds.

Colleges are facing an altogether different kind of shortage. They're having to drop courses, fire professors, close laboratories, limit libraries. Without your help, we'll have the ultimate crisis on our hands: a shortage of ideas.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR—David Davidson has specialized in covering the collegiate sports scene for the Atlanta Journal the last six years. A 1969 graduate of Millsaps College, he began his sports writing career at the Jackson (Miss.) Daily News and was voted the state's Sports Writer of the Year in 1970.

1.6 rule. We are indeed taking people in who cannot do college work and that is exploitation."

Under the old rule, a prospect had to project, though a complicated formula, a 1.6 grade-point average, or a C- average, on a 4.0 scale. But the rule was relaxed to allow any prospect with a 2.0 high school grade-point average, or a straight C average, to qualify for a grant-in-aid.

"To me," McWhorter said, "the 2.0 rule isn't much of a standard. The NCAA once required a 750 score on the college boards (SAT) to qualify for a grant-in-aid. So you can see we've gone backward."

Because privacy laws forbid release of grade information without consent of the individual, McWhorter admitted, "My concern is based on surmise rather than hard statistics."

"What's happened," said one respected coach in the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, "is we've made the 2.0 average in high school respectable. If a kid gets a 2.0, that's very, very minimal by any stretch."

Said a coach at a Big Ten institution noted for academic excellence, "Our admissions qualifications are controlled by a faculty senate committee on athletics. The 2.0 is not a significant figure for us." For many schools, though, 2.0 is enough—for a football player, although it would not be for a non-athlete.

"Sure," one coach at a football-prominent institution in the Southwest Conference pointed out, "there are a lot of schools with double standards for athletes and other students. But there's nothing wrong with that because the athlete contributes so much to the well-being of the college, the spirit, the image, etc."

Perhaps because football players are not graduating in more significant numbers, many coaches and members of the academic community across the nation are advocating proposals to raise requirements to qualify for a grant-in-aid. One popular plan has, appropriately, a football label—"the triple option." It would require an athlete to have either a 2.25 high school grade-point average, or a 750 SAT score, or a 17 ACT score to qualify for a scholarship. That plan has been advocated by the College Football Association, which is made up of the 70 or so institutions with the largest football programs in the nation.

"If you raise the entrance requirements," said one Atlantic Coast Conference coach, "then you increase the chances that youngster will earn his degree. As long as a kid can bring with him a legitimate chance to graduate, that's half the battle."

"If we can slowly raise the standard," said one prominent Eastern independent coach, "from 2.0 to 2.25, then maybe to 2.3, 2.4, and so on, over a four- or five-year period we would have good standards that would not be unreasonable. That way the high school coaches and teachers and principals would make their kids work harder. It would give kids more incentive to do the academic work. But jumping from a 2.0 to a 2.3 or more in one leap wouldn't be fair to those people."

That same coach would exempt 10 percent, or three out of the maximum 30 signees each year at Division I institutions, who he said were the exceptions to the rules—those who do not qualify or project, but who can do college work.

At the same time, there are institutions which seem to take the opposite stance. Like Notre Dame. Of 24 Notre Dame players in professional football in Coleman's 1976 study, all 24 had their degrees.

"First things come first," according to the Rev. Edmund Joyce, chairman of the Faculty Board in Control of Athletics at Notre Dame, "and the first things are all academics. We put the prime emphasis on that very thought. That's exactly what I tell every squad of athletes when they first arrive here in the Fall—and they hear it over and over again all the rest of the time they are here at the university."

"Most of the youngsters who come here," Father Joyce predicted, "are primarily interested in getting an education. I don't think these kids look at this program as just a training ground for the pros."

Of course, it is impossible to force knowledge or the desire to graduate on a player, but a university can help, with tutoring, encouragement, and proper guidance. At one Big Ten Conference school the head coach himself participates in the tutoring of freshman players. Such an interest cannot help but be a positive influence on a young player.

Unfortunately, it seems more and more of those who provide the funds for collegiate football are less interested in graduation percentage than the head coach's winning percentage. But the many fine institutions that manage to keep their scholastic priorities in perspective continue to prove there is room for the Academic All-America on the college football field.

SEATBELTS THAT PUT THEMSELVES ON.

Remember when Mom attached your mittens to your coatsleeves? The theory was, even the warmest gloves in the class wouldn't do you much good if you didn't use them.

The theory's the same for seatbelts.

That's why one of the many exclusive features in the deluxe model Rabbit—the Rabbit "L"—is an automatic seatbelt in each front seat.

When you slide into your seat, you're sliding behind the seatbelt.

When you shut the door, the seatbelt is fastened.

There's no buzzing to remind you that you forgot.

Because if you're driving our Rabbit "L", you don't have to remember.

Together with a knee bar that restrains you from jolting forward, our seatbelt makes the most advanced passive restraint system available.

Of course, by 1984 every new car in America must have a passive restraint system. Transportation Secretary Adams says so.

But we didn't wait to be told. Only the Rabbit "L" has automatic seatbelts today. And has had them since 1975.

That's because Volkswagen doesn't think like any old car company. Volkswagen thinks like a mother.

RUNNING BACKS

What makes a great one?

By Mai Florence,
Los Angeles TIMES

In a circus, he'd be an aerialist. In a motion picture, or play, he'd be the leading man. In the Air Corps, he'd be a fighter pilot.

The running back in American collegiate football struts across his stage with all eyes on him. His is a glamorous role.

By the nature of his position, he has the ball—and people follow the ball, even though some purists contend that line play is a more revealing aspect of the game.

Running backs come in all sizes and shapes. Some are lean, whippet types; others are squat and exceedingly fast; and still more are big, brutish individuals who relish contact.

Then, there's the quintessential runner, one who combines size, speed, strength, and agility, along with a desire to excel.

But runners have one thing in common: they're all endowed with natural ability. If they're not born with it, it's defined at an early age and refined later.

Most running backs will tell you that what they do is instinctive and they haven't programmed the subtle moves, fakes, and bursts of speed they make that electrify a crowd.

A former All-American from the West Coast who was a leading Heisman Trophy candidate puts it this way:

"When I line up, all I think about is touchdown. No matter how I get it, it's still six points. Whatever happens, I just react. Most of the time you don't have time to think about what you're going to do.

"Your reflexes tell you to spin, fake, or not go through the hole the play calls for and go outside. It's almost like a dream. You react to the way things are happening . . . let nature take its course. That's what I think a running back is."

Another All-American from the Midwest agrees that running is an unconscious thing.

"I'd say it's 75 percent instinct and 25 percent knowledge," he said. "Almost every runner will tell you, 'I don't know what I was doing. I was out there doing what I know how to do, and if I wanted to go out there and do it now, I couldn't. But if you put me in a game situation, I could.'"

There are other nuances that contribute to the complex structure of the running back.

"One of the most important," says a prominent Southern coach, "is seeing where to run . . . the vision and feel of the field and, when you have that, certainly speed, strength, acceleration, and the ability to elude tacklers are essential skills."

ABOUT THE AUTHOR—Mal Florence, in his 27 years as a sportswriter for the Los Angeles Times, has covered pro and college football, pro and college basketball and track and field. He has won numerous regional Press Club awards and several of his articles have appeared in Best Sports Stories of the Year. He attended USC and majored in journalism at Missouri, graduating in 1949.

ware of his Southern colleague's analysis, also said that good vision is a vital component of a running back.

"That's the ability to move fast on your feet, keeping your eyes open and searching out what's going on. We try to coach vision. We try to coach body movement and how to avoid and break tackles.

"One of the things we say is that in avoiding tacklers, the runner should miss them by the narrowest possible margin. If I escape you by going wide, I may run into someone else and lose my momentum going up field. So we try to get them to just slip the tackle."

Of course, there are the obvious requirements—such as speed, durability, and balance, and the West Coast coach talked about them:

"Speed is a blessing. I don't know if you can be a great back without it, but you can be a good back without it if you're strong.

"Being slow and not very physical is a bad combination. But if you have balance—and you have to have that no matter what—and the ability to explode into people, you can get away with just average speed. Obviously, speed, balance, and strength are physical attributes you need."

The West Coast coach, who is partial to his own I formation, says that runners in option systems don't develop their skills as well as runners in the I.

"Running backs on option teams are mostly running on a prescribed path. They get the ball or don't get it depending on whether there's a hole. The I tailback, however, gets the ball right away and he has to adjust to how the people are attacking him. He has to be creative."

It's often conjectured that great running backs, like other exceptionally skilled athletes, are endowed with physical talent at birth.

"I'm not sure the good running back is born with talent as much as he develops it at a very young age playing touch football on the corner lot," the Southern coach said. "But, when they reach organized football, they either have it or they don't."

Most coaches and players interviewed believe that runners, like other people, are diverse personalities. They can be outgoing, withdrawn, moody, introverted, cocky, shy, or whatever. There's no distinctive personality mold.

But they are distinctive as running artists even if the differences are slight. Most great runners are inimitable.

"All great runners have their own particular styles," the Southern coach says. "Some don't look like they're running that fast or hard, but people miss them. Why? Well, I remember Steve Van Buren when he played for LSU and the Philadelphia Eagles. He made everybody look like they were poor tacklers.

"Then, there are the runners who always seem to run to the right place. Doak Walker of SMU was the greatest example I know. He wasn't particularly elusive or strong. He had good but not great speed, but he always ran to where the blockers opened the holes."

Coaches like to talk about second effort and the way a runner struggles for three yards when he should have been restricted to one or two; a runner's tolerance to pain and his toughness that allows him to endure punishment; old fashioned guts and things like that.

But there's another type, the consummate artist, the runner who shifts and glides, pirouettes and squirms, and does his best to avoid the congestion of tangled bodies in the line.

O.J. Simpson, the former Heisman Trophy winner from USC renowned as "The Juice," is in this category by his own admission:

"I've heard a lot about how I stutter-step up at the line, how I slow up and look around instead of blasting up into a hole. But I've never been the type of runner who goes looking for people to hit.

"I like to move around and be smooth about things rather than go slamming up into holes that don't exist. I'm an optimistic type. I always believe there's a hole there somewhere if I can just find it.

"I know if I'd gone charging up into my assigned hole all the time, there'd be a lot of blockers with cleat marks all up their back. But why should I do that? Why should I head into trouble? When I go out on the field I always look for the baddest dude on the other team and I get it in my mind that he's never going to hit me."

Naturally, Simpson does get hit, and often. But his and any other runner's goal is to gain yards and score touchdowns.

How they do it is strictly up to them and their own innate talent that enables them to improvise under pressure. There is more than one path to the goal line.

After all, if the college running back is the star of the football show, he should be allowed to set his own stage.

DO-IT-YOURSELF STATS N' FACTS

Every football fan knows that the score doesn't always give a good picture of a game. A few statistics, like those that can be kept on this page can make the picture clearer, show what the individual stars contribute and help to win post-game "debates." Besides, it can be fun to second guess the official scorers whose statistics will appear in tomorrow's papers. But before you start, here are some pointers on being a statistician:

1. Keep cumulative totals to be informed "up to the minute" and to simplify your figuring of team totals. EXAMPLE: Jones gains 3, 6, 9, 2 yards and you write 3, 9, 18, 20 on his line.
2. On plays involving penalties measured from the point of the foul, credit the rusher or pass receiver with yardage only to the point of the infraction.
3. Charge gains and losses on fumbles to the player who, in your judgement, contributed most to the error.
4. Don't score two-point conversion attempts after touchdowns as rushing or passing plays.

UNIVERSITY OF HAWAII

out of a 1954 game with UH, largely because of a financial bind. The mainlanders had to pare off a game, and the costly UH matchup was the logical choice, even though the contest already had been advertised and the tickets printed.

Vasconcellos had done a good deal of homework behind the scenes, and when he went to that 1955 convention, he already had the support of names and schools such as Biggie Munn of Michigan State, Bobby Dodd of Georgia Tech, Paul (Bear) Bryant of Kentucky, and Leo Harris of Oregon.

"On the first voice vote, it was too close to tell," he said. "So they had a blue-badge vote (by delegate identification badge), and it passed, 86-67."

Hank termed it his "greatest moment" as an athletic administrator, and with justification. Until that time, it was practically and financially impossible for Mainland teams to play in Hawaii with any regularity.

So the 'Bows generally lived with one horribly long trip to the Mainland for three or four games with college level teams, plus a string of local skirmishes against such household names as the Moiliili Bears, the Leilehua Vandals, and the Town Team.

Hank's success in winning support wasn't accidental. A friendly, outgoing individual, Vasconcellos projected the University's image well. "When people (vacationing athletic directors and coaches) would come over, we would play golf with them and give them orchids to take home when they left. And when we could, we'd schedule a game."

But the Hawaii program didn't really begin to turn around until the late 1960s, when the late governor, John A. Burns, decided the state needed to field athletic teams worthy of the island name. That feeling was considerably furthered after Burns experienced a 54-0 loss to the Air Force Academy in 1966.

He was instrumental in forming Ahahui Koa Anuenue, the "Society of the Rainbow Warrior," as an organization to raise the scholarship funds necessary for an athletic program on a respectable level. And the state committed itself to the same.

And because of Vasconcellos' vision, the schedule began slowly but steadily to improve.

One of the first moves in 1968 was to bring in an almost completely new staff, headed by Athletic Director Paul Durham, who came to the Islands from 1,200-student Linfield College.

"The schedule hadn't been developed very far in advance," Durham said, understandably so considering the school abandoned football for a year back in 1961.

"With Koa Anuenue blossoming, we decided to upgrade the schedule. We began to sign every school we could, but most of big ones were not very interested in playing, except at the end of the season."

That December trip to sidestep the chill was a winner. Conference commitments during the middle of the season made it difficult for most incoming teams otherwise.

So the 'Bows began to play at least one big game a year—Nebraska in 1971, Stanford and Tennessee in 1972, Washington in 1973, Arizona State in 1974, Tennessee in 1975, Nebraska in 1976, Arizona and South Carolina in 1977, and now Nebraska and Southern California in 1978. Many of the schools signed for guarantees that were a fraction of what they normally received.

With interest aroused in a possible WAC tie-up, Durham also began to schedule as many WAC teams as possible. And after a period with an acting athletic director, Ray Nagel resumed the bid for WAC membership when he became AD in 1976. The work that he did, with the support of the UH Board of Regents, led to the school's acceptance by the WAC fathers—the deal to be consummated in 1979.

"Membership in a conference will definitely help us, especially during the middle portions of the season," Nagel said. "Before, we were going from A-to-Z on our schedule, from Portland State and Humboldt State to Nebraska and USC."

That doesn't mean that the Rainbows will be playing a "super-team" Division I opponent every week, but it does mean that there won't be a dip into the lower ranks once the WAC schedule is in full force.

UH will be paying WAC opponents more to play in Hawaii than the 'Bows will receive when they play on the Mainland. But the WAC teams will play more games in the Islands than the 'Bows play at Mainland WAC locations. "We have a ratio of six games here to two over there to work with, but 5-3 will be okay; we don't consider it a hard-and-fast rule," Nagel said.

Will it work? Nagel thinks so. "The allure of Hawaii means a lot," he said. "Having coached at Utah when we came over here, I know the trip can be used to help a team recruit." And the visiting school can make up any financial deficit by playing an extra home game during the season.

Those two things say it in a nutshell. As long as the images that launched this epistle remain in the minds of football playing schools around the country, Hawaii will schedule.

And those who live in the Islands are betting the images will survive.

Beautiful beaches with Diamond Head in the background and lovely Hawaiian women are images that attract football teams to the Islands.

The WAC

Return all lifejackets. The Western Athletic Conference remains afloat. Gasps of doom, as mammoth as the Grand Canyon, have faded into whispering sighs on the Arizona desert.

Gone to the PAC-10 conference are charter members Arizona State and Arizona, but San Diego State has joined the wild WAC and Hawaii (1979) and Nevada-Las Vegas (1980) will soon follow. Sixteen years old, the WAC has a new look swapping the painted desert for the sands of Waikiki and the lights of the Las Vegas strip.

A new post-season bowl game will go with the new WAC. The Holiday Bowl, to be played in the 52,000-seat San Diego Stadium, was approved by the NCAA and tickets were already selling fast for the initial game Dec. 22, 1978. The WAC champion will play an invited major college team in the Holiday Bowl, much like the Fiesta Bowl over the past seven years. The Mizlou Network will telecast the Holiday Bowl over the next three years.

Official charities for the Holiday Bowl are the Institute for Burn Medicine and the San Diego Children's Hospital and Health Center.

The Holiday Bowl name was selected over Poinsettia Bowl, in belief that the game would appeal to the stampede of tourists which visit San Diego around Christmas time. Poinsettias will be the official emblem of the bowl and will be used on all graphics.

In 1978 the WAC will have seven members after consisting of eight universities since 1968 when Texas-El Paso and Colorado State were added to the six charter members. Those original members of 1962 were New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah, Brigham Young and the outgoing schools of Arizona and Arizona State. All WAC teams will meet once in football each year and on a home-and-home basis in basketball.

With the arrival of Hawaii next year the WAC will be back to eight members and will then stretch to nine in 1980 when it welcomes Nevada-Las Vegas.

The WAC got its roots when former New Mexico Athletic Director Pete McDavid and Arizona AD Dick Clausen held an informal meeting in New York 17 years ago to discuss the possibility of starting a new conference. The dream came true on July 1, 1962 when four members of the Skyline Conference joined with two members of the Border Conference to form the WAC.

The WAC leads the nation each year in basketball attendance and football crowds are growing larger. All members are dedicated to non-revenue sports and the WAC is often the home conference of many All-Americans and national champions.

The WAC is headquartered in Denver, Colo., where commissioner Stan Bates and Information Director Nurdy Jensen are stationed.

First to Fly, Older than Statehood

A cow pasture made do for the University of New Mexico football team which was fielded in 1892—some 20 years before statehood. But change and growth have been a constant ever since and today the Lobos play on a modern Hy-Play field beneath a $1.2 million pressbox—perhaps the best in the nation.

University Stadium is the home of the Lobos and since opening 18 seasons ago nearly two million fans have attended 99 games. The stadium seats 30,646 fans in two main seating areas. Each area is 63 rows high with 35 rows below ground level and 28 rows above the concourse. A pair of elevators take working press and VIPs high above the playing field.

It's a colorful history which highlights New Mexico football. The UNM team of 1929 became the first collegiate team ever to fly to a game. Aboard a Ford Tri-Motor airplane, Coach Roy Johnson took his team to California where they played Occidental College of Los Angeles. Rumors have it that Coach Johnson made his first team ride the train to Los Angeles while his second team flew—just to be cautious. But to this day Johnson protests that the team was merely divided in half since the plane could not carry the entire squad. Those who flew to LA took the ground route back and the ones who rode the train en route were allowed to fly on return.

The game was played in the Rose Bowl with the Lobos losing before 17,000 people, by far the biggest crowd ever to watch them play to that date. It was also the first night game for a New Mexico team.

Two years prior to that airborne team the Lobos completed their only undefeated season under Coach Johnson, going 8-0-1 while recording five shutouts.

UNM moved to the present stadium on September 17, 1960, and dedicated it with a 77-6 smashing of the Pumas of National University of Mexico. It was the biggest win ever for UNM at University Stadium.

Renovation of the stadium was completed in August of 1976. The new pressbox has three levels plus a top deck for photographers and is considered the perfect setting for televised sporting events. The first two levels seat 646 spectators in luxury with enclosed lounges behind open seating areas.

The press area can handle 100 working press members plus five radio stations. On the third level, it is totally enclosed and carpeted.

The Hy-Play turf is a natural grass and not as conducive to injuries as synthetic turf. Yet, it is durable and contains its own electronic system which judges when the turf needs water or fertilizer and automatically administers the needed amounts.

The new track is an asphalt-based rubberized surface which has eight lanes and is 440 yards around.
