Boise State, UNLV Next on Home Slate

Following tonight's contest, the Tigers will take to the road once again, meeting the Idaho Vandals next Saturday night in Moscow, Id. That game can be heard live on KJOY radio in Stockton and don't forget that Coach Bob Toledo's squad will return home in two weeks for a pair of exciting games in Pacific Memorial Stadium.

Saturday, Sept. 25, perennial Big Sky Conference power Boise State, which has won at least 10 games in each of the last three seasons, will be here. One week later, PCAA newcomer Nevada-Las Vegas comes to town. The "Runnin' Rebels" under Coach Harvey Hyde are always one of the most entertaining offensive clubs around.

Be sure to get your tickets now for these two key contests and don't forget that Monday night, the nationally-ranked UOP women's volleyball team will open their season against San Jose State at the Spanos Center (7:30 p.m.) and Wednesday night it will be Ilie Nastase and Bill Scanlon in another Spanos Center tennis spectacular.

SCOUTING REPORT

Tigers, Aggies Renew Local Rivalry

After finding out what it's like to be an underdog last Saturday night in South Carolina, the Pacific football team will get a taste of the favorite's role tonight when it hosts UC Davis in the 1982 home opener at Pacific Memorial Stadium.

Coach Bob Toledo knows it's a role which can breed confidence but is very aware of what can happen when an opponent is taken lightly, particularly one the caliber of Coach Jim Sochor's UC Davis.

"Davis has an excellent program and has proven itself capable of playing above the Division II level," said Toledo, alluding to the fact that the Aggies routed UOP, 31-14, in 1978, one year before Toledo arrived. "Sochor has come out and said this will be one of his best teams and has made no secret of the fact that he feels they can play with us.

"If we take them lightly at all, we can be beaten." The track record of Sochor and his club speaks for itself. There's a 91-28-4 record and 11 consecutive Far Western Conference titles since Sochor's arrival, five players on pro rosters at this time and, of course, the stinging victory over the Tigers four years ago.

Tonight will mark the Aggies' '82 debut and they should find a Tiger squad bent on revenge—not only for the last meeting between the two but for a 41-6 defeat inflicted by South Carolina. Toledo was disappointed but philosophical about the result.

"South Carolina is a very good football team, probably the best we'll face all year. And you've got to remember, we contributed greatly to the score with turnovers, penalties and plain poor play," said Toledo. "But I think there's some hope, some real potential.

"We played particularly poorly on defense, but that's where most of our youth is and they will improve with experience. Offensively, you might say we were misfiring. The things we were trying to do were there but the execution and timing was off. Having that game under our belts will make us much tougher tonight."

The Tigers will field basically the same lineup on both sides of the football. Junior JC transfer Paul Berner will again direct the offense. He was 19 of 44 for 184 yards last week.

Seniors Gary Blackwell (fullback) and David Brown (tailback) will again be starting with Berner in the backfield and Ron Woods and Kurt Heinrich are expected to be at the wide receiver posts.

Sacramento native Thomas Cowling (#37) starts at outside linebacker for the Tigers tonight.

Across the front line will be tight end Tony Camp, tackles Rick Penn and Steve Smith, guards Dan McGahan and Jeff Carter and freshman center Robert Zolg, although the latter could be replaced by junior Jim Hearn who has been sidelined with a knee injury.

On defense, last week's standouts were nose guard George Dunlap, inside linebacker Rob Kochman and free safety Kevin Greene. Dunlap will be flanked in the pits by tackles Neil Ross and Kereshawn Hardy. Kochman, who got UOP's first interception of the year last week, will have Kevin Einck lined up with him inside and Thomas Cowling and Michael Greer outside. Greene, who led the Tigers with 12 tackles vs. Carolina as well as a fumble recovery, heads a secondary that includes Bob Shollin, Darrell Divinity and Anthony Freeman.

UC Davis will feature an excellent quarterback—Ken O'Brien—and a veteran offensive line. O'Brien, considered a pro prospect at 6-4,200, has thrown for over 3,500 yards and 21 touchdowns in the past two years. His protectors include senior Steve Nill (guard) and juniors Andy Craig and Kurt Rockwell at tackle and John Johnson at guard. All are returning starters.

The biggest names on defense are Glenn Fricker and Bo Eason. Fricker is a 1981 all-conference choice at defensive end while swift, free safety Eason is another returning first stringer and the brother of touted Illinois quarterback Tony Eason. Other starters back include tackle Bob Slater, end Pat Doherty and defensive back Gavin Carr.

UOP returns home in two weeks to host Big Sky Conference power Boise State at Pacific Memorial Stadium. For ticket information call (209) 946-2474.

THE SPANOS SPORTS QUIZ

Here's a chance to test your knowledge of UOP football, and have a little fun, too. All material is taken from the 1980 UOP Press Guide.

1. What member of the 1982 Tiger football team made a guest appearance on the Johnny Carson Show during the past year?
2. Who was the last UOP player to be ranked nationally (top twenty) in punting?
3. Who was the first Tiger player to be ranked nationally (top twenty) in receiving?
4. What two UOP players have been named Northern California Back of the Year?

HEAD COACH BOB TOLEDO

A Winner Building A Winning Program

In just three years at the helm of the University of the Pacific football program, Bob Toledo has established a winning team and community attitude that promises to make 1982 the brightest season for the Tigers in some time.

Built around an exciting, intricate, pro style passing offense (UOP has been one of the nation's passingest teams in the past three years) and freshmen-oriented recruiting, Toledo's club has struggled at times while building the foundation now established but has also developed a reputation for rising to the occasion and being able to play with anybody in the country on a given Saturday.

In 1979, his first year at Pacific, the energetic coach was highly responsible for the more than 19,000 fans that poured into Pacific Memorial Stadium each game. That figure marked the largest average attendance at UOP in more than 20 years.

Toledo's squad also pulled the first of many shockers on the field that season, clobbering Iowa State, 24-7, to give UOP its first-ever win over a Big Eight school. A year later, the youthful Tigers upended Washington State, 24-22, UOP's first win over the Pac-10 since 1969.

In 1981, Toledo orchestrated two remarkable upsets — 23-21 vs. South Carolina and 23-17 vs. Hawaii — over teams that had been rated in the Top 20 at one time during the season. UOP also improved its overall record for the third straight year.

These successes, the solid foundation already laid and one of the finest recruiting classes in Tiger history bring Toledo to his next hurdle — winning Pacific's first Pacific Coast Athletic Association title. And over the years, winning is something Toledo has become very familiar with. He has been a winner in every phase of the game.

One of the nation's youngest head coaches, the 36-year-old Toledo spent three years as the secondary coach at USC prior to accepting the UOP post. Southern Cal was 31-6 during Toledo's tenure, winning two Pac-10 titles, two Rose Bowls, a Bluebonnet Bowl and the national championship in 1978.

Before his stint at USC, Toledo spent three seasons at UC Riverside, the first as offensive coordinator, the final two as head coach. The Highlanders were 15-6 during his head coaching reign (8-3 in 1974 and 7-3 in 1975) and won two California Collegiate Athletic Association championships. They were 8-2 in 1973. In each of the three years, Riverside was ranked in the Top 10 nationally in total offense in Division II.

The outgoing, pass-minded Toledo earned a shot at the college ranks after compiling a 26-5-1 record in three seasons at Riordan High School (San Francisco) and capturing a pair of West Catholic Athletic League titles. He was an assistant at Riordan in 1969.

Toledo also enjoyed a standout playing career. He starred for San Francisco State in 1966 and 1967, quarterbacking the Gators to first place in the Far Western Conference as a senior and runner-up honors the previous year.

In 1967, Toledo had one of the finest seasons in college football history. He completed 211 of 396 passes (.533) for 3,513 yards and 45 touchdowns. He set eight NCAA Division II records, six of which still stand.

He was second team All-America (Div. II), NorCal Back-of-the-Year, first team All-FWC and led the country in total offense. He passed for over 4,000 yards in two seasons at S.F. State.

Earlier in his playing career, Toledo was a JC All-American at San Jose City College and started for three seasons at Lincoln High in San Jose.

Toledo is married (wife Elaine) and has three girls (Demetra 13, Christa 12, and Alissa 6). He graduated from San Francisco State in 1968.

ASSISTANT COACHES

Tiger Staff One of College Football's Finest

Assistant coaches are the lifeblood of a coaching staff. While the head coach is always more visible, makes the final decisions and ultimately bears the responsibility for the success of a program, it's the assistants who lay the groundwork.

Among Coach Bob Toledo's staff's duties are recruiting, watching and analyzing film, administrative work, public relations appearances, keeping tabs on the academic and personal well-being of their players and, of course, on-the-field coaching.

There are extremely long hours during the season and hard work throughout the year in preparation and planning. Toledo's 1982 Tiger staff, pictured below, ranks with the best anywhere in both dedication and performance.

1982 Football Banquet and Quarterback Club Film Meetings

The Quarterback Club will host its 35th annual Football Awards Banquet, Nov. 30, at the Stockton Golf and Country Club.

Former UOP and NFL quarterback Bob Lee, who played in three Super Bowls during his NFL career, will serve as the evening's master of ceremonies. Lee was recently inducted as a charter member in the UOP Football Hall of Fame.

Seating for this event, which promises to be the best in many years, is limited so reservations must be made early. Dinner will be $15.00 per person. For reservations or further information, call UOP assistant coach Steve Hall at 946-2127.

The Quarterback Club will also hold a weekly meeting, each Monday at noon in the Pacific Club (on the east rim of Pacific Memorial Stadium), at which head coach Bob Toledo will talk and show films of Saturday's game. Lunch will be available.

All club members and those interested in joining are invited to attend. The Oct. 9 meeting will be held at a site still to be determined and there will be no meeting Oct. 30. For further information, call the UOP Sports Information Office, 946-2472.

by Herschel Nissenson, College Football Editor, THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Georgia's Herschel Walker has established six NCAA records.

John Elway returns to The Farm to pilot Stanford's aerial circus.

As they say on the golf tour, "Drive for show, putt for dough."

That parable can be seen in football, as well, where flashy offensive fireworks, like a booming drive off the tee, may thrill the spectators, but a stingy defense and a sound kicking game (like putting, the nitty-gritty) are what make a consistent winner.

Be that as it may, the offensive performers still grab the lion's share of the headlines. It catches one's eye to read that Herschel Walker rushed for 283 yards, as he did against Vanderbilt in 1980, or that John Elway threw for six touchdowns against Oregon State that same year—four in the first quarter—or that Dan Marino fired six touchdown passes against South Carolina last year. Somehow, reading that linebacker Joe Btfsplk made 13 primary stops and assisted on seven others doesn't have quite the same ring.

Since a running back or quarterback always seems to win the Heisman Trophy, those glamor positions will hog the spotlight once again this fall, especially with the likes of Georgia's Walker, North

Penn State looks tough again this season with the return of a healthy Curt Warner.

Carolina's Kelvin Bryant, Southern Methodist's Eric Dickerson and Craig James and Penn State's Curt Warner carrying the football and Stanford's Elway, Pitt's Marino, Miami's Jim Kelly and Illinois' Tony Eason throwing it.

The basic facts about Walker, a 6-1, 220-pound blend of blazing speed and crunching power, are 1,616 yards in 1980, most ever by a freshman, and 1,891 in '81, most ever by a sophomore. He holds 15 school records, eight South-eastern Conference records and six NCAA marks and is more than halfway toward Tony Dorsett's NCAA rushing standard of 6,082 yards. Walker will be back for a least one more year after deciding not to challenge the National Football league rule barring underclassmen.

Walker is an unusual person, as well as a superb athlete. Lend an ear to his announcement that he will remain at Georgia:

"I still feel the NFL rule is basically unconstitutional; however, I don't want to interfere with the system that is designed to be the best for the majority of people involved. And I think I have become more mature being around the people at Georgia and experiencing the college life. It has helped me both as a person and an athlete. By challenging the rule, I think it could have some detrimental effects, and staying at Georgia will be the best for me in the long run.

"I think I am becoming more of a person even if I never play football again. I don't care if I would be the best football player ever because I don't think it's going to mean anything to me. I think what means a great deal to me is to keep the friends I have here and keep what's going here straight."

Could Walker, who turned 20 in March, have made it in the pros at that tender age?

"Earl Campbell and Herschel Walker are the only two players I've ever seen who could have gone straight from high school to the NFL," says Gil Brandt, the respected personnel chief of the Dallas Cowboys.

Bryant might have surpassed Walker's numbers in 1981 had he remained healthy all season. The 6-2, 195-pounder rushed for 1,015 yards and scored 18 touchdowns—15 in the first three games—despite playing in just 22 of Carolina's 44 quarters during the regular season.

A knee injury in the first quarter of the fourth game sent Bryant to the sidelines for a month. But he came back and capped the season with a career-high 247 yards against Duke and was named co-MVP in the Tar Heels' Gator Bowl victory over Arkansas.

SMU's tailback tandem of Dickerson, 6-3, 215, and James, 6-1, 220, piled up 2,646 yards, with Dickerson's 1,428 topping the Southwest Conference—only

Earl Campbell's 1,744 for Texas in 1977 was better—and also was the best in school history. James is a super receiver besides being a standout runner and he also took over the punting duties midway through the 1981 campaign.

The Dickerson-James duo became the 12th pair of teammates in NCAA annals to gain 1,000 yards apiece in the same season, but it was only the fifth time two thousand-yard ball-carriers had averaged 100 yards a game.

Penn State's Warner, a sturdy 6-0 and 195 pounds, rushed for 1,044 yards, although he missed 2½ games with hamstring pulls. He ranked among the nation's leaders before his injuries, and when he was healthy he out-rushed Heisman Trophy winner Marcus Allen of Southern Cal in the Fiesta bowl—145 yards on 26 carries to 85 on 30. Warner's 256-yard effort against Syracuse erased a single-game school record which had stood for 70 years.

If any of those horses falter, keep an eye on Kerwin Bell of Kansas, Florida's James Jones, Roger Craig and Mike Rozier of Nebraska, North Carolina State's Joe McIntosh, Phil Carter of Notre Dame, Ohio State's Tim Spencer, Oklahoma's Stanley Wilson, Johnny Hector of Texas A&M, Cyrus Lawrence of Virginia Tech and Washington State's Tim Harris.

man who spent thousands of dollars to put his son through college and all he got was a quarterback? Peres Elway and Marino aren't footing the bills for their strong-armed sons, of course, although it was a close call in Marino's case.

He was drafted by baseball's Kansas City Royals in 1979—oddly enough, so was Elway—but spurned their offer when the NCAA ruled that while a professional athlete could play another sport in college, he was ineligible for a grant-in-aid.

Football is Marino's career these days and, despite being sidelined now and then by injuries, he is Pitt's all-time passing leader with 6,165 yards. "Marino will dominate college quarterbacks for as long as he's around," says Florida State Coach Bobby Bowden. "He's a pro quarterback in college, really."

Elway, on the other hand, is a pro baseball player in college. The golden arm from The Farm, which is what they call Stanford, appears headed on a collision course with virtually every school and Pac-10 career passing record. His 6,107 yards is fifth in conference history—leader Jack Thompson is only 1,711 yards away—and Elway's 53 touchdown passes has tied Thompson and Jim Plunkett at the top of the Pac-10 list.

However, Elway signed a six-figure baseball contract with the New York Yankees and played in their minor league system last summer. It remains to be seen which sport he will choose, but if George Steinbrenner and the Yankees are serious, there is no way an NFL team can match their money offer. And this is a passer whom New England Patriots personnel director Dick Steinberg calls "the best quarterback prospect I've ever seen and the best player in college football today. He has no flaws."

Virginia Tech relies heavily on the running ability of Cyrus Lawrence.

Kelly, who hails from East Brady, Pa., rejected another school because at 6-3 and 210 pounds they wanted to make him a linebacker. Instead, he went to Miami where he has piled up some big numbers. Last season, Kelly completed 168 of 285 passes for 2,403 yards and 14 touchdowns.

Eason, who set a Big Ten record by throwing for 3,360 yards in 1981, has plenty of support, too. Gil Brandt calls him "a great athlete. I don't see any weaknesses," while Illinois Coach Mike White puts his star passer "in the same class with all the other great quarterbacks I've been associated with. He has a pro's arm and the kind of ability they drool over."

There are plenty of other standout quarterbacks around, including Homer Jordan, who directed Clemson to the 1981 national championship; Southern Mississippi's Reggie Collier, Steve Smith of Michigan, Frank Seurer of Kansas, LSU's Alan Risher, Minnesota's Mike Hoseness, John Bond of Mississippi State, Purdue's Scott Campbell, Steve Clarkson of San Jose State, Gary Kubiak of Texas A&M, Vanderbilt's Whit Taylor and Gary Schofield of Wake Forest.

Of course, someone must snap the ball to them and two centers stand—or crouch—above the crowd. Nebraska's 280-pound Dave Rimington won the Outland Trophy last year as the nation's top lineman and was named Offensive Player of the Year in the Big Eight, an almost unbelievable honor for a lineman. Bart Oates of Brigham Young is considered the finest center in the Cougars' history.

And someone must catch the ball when the quarterbacks throw it. The best of the wide receivers appear to be Michigan's Anthony Carter and Stanley Washington of Texas Christian.

Coach Bo Schembechler calls Carter "without question the most exciting player in college football. He is simply spectacular. He has no peer in college football at his position and he has no peer as a big-play specialist."

Carter has scored a touchdown for every four catches in his career, ranking him among the NCAA's top four in that category. His 16.7-yard career average every time he touches the ball—he's a superb kick returner, too—is well ahead of the NCAA record of 13.8 held by Nebraska's Johnny Rodgers, the 1972 Heisman winner.

Washington was the SWC's leading receiver in 1981. He caught 49 passes for 854 yards, the latter number setting a single-season TCU record. His career figures of 93 receptions for 1,592 yards and 15 touchdowns are second to Mike Renfro on the TCU charts.

Col. Earl (Red) Blaik was far more than just a winning football coach whose Dartmouth and Army teams produced 166 victories in a span of 25 years. He was a teacher whose principles, dedication, devotion and drive molded a superb breed of man with exceptional leadership qualities.

Guided by this master tactician and innovator, Blaik's West Point teams won three national championships, seven Lambert Trophies, symbolic of eastern gridiron supremacy, and compiled a winning streak of 25 games and an unbeaten streak of 32. In his seven years at

AN ARMY LEGEND

Dartmouth and 18 at West Point, he developed 29 All-Americans, three of whom—Glenn Davis, Doc Blanchard and Pete Dawkins—won the Heisman Trophy. Fifteen of his assistant coaches, including Vince Lombardi, went on to head coaching jobs.

As for the superior men spurred to success by his influence, they are legend and include countless generals and leaders of industry, science and education, all of them "his boys" who never have lost touch with their mentor.

Blaik himself was influenced by many great men, including Gen. Douglas MacArthur and Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger as well as the various coaches for whom he played or worked, Charley Daly, George Little and Biff Jones.

He felt football and education should go hand in hand, but that education was No. 1. He lived by a single slogan and taught those he coached to live by it, too. It was this:

"You Have to Pay the Price." That was the title of his autobiography; the leit motif of a fantastic career as an athlete, coach and, finally, as a captain of industry, a phase of his life which began when he resigned as head coach at West Point, January 13, 1959.

He was born in Detroit but his athletic career began when Earl, or "Red," the nickname he picked up in early boyhood, was an eight-year-old in the fourth grade of grammar school in Dayton, Ohio. "That was when—and I recall it vividly—I first became fascinated with this magnificent game of football."

In every school at every level he was a time to fit dramatics into his busy schedule.

Due to his dad's connection with Gov. James Cox's campaign for Congress, young Blaik got an appointment to West Point.

Reporting as a plebe, June 14, 1918, with never an inkling of what lay ahead, he plunged into the harsh regimen of a Cadet and, in two years of telescoped classes, due to war, Red became the top athlete of his graduating class, winner of the prestigious Athletic Sabre.

It was during this period that he met Gen. MacArthur, the man who was to influence him from this point on through his long career as a coach. MacArthur had just been appointed

Superintendent of the Military Academy and his intense interest in athletics was to bring about many beneficial changes in the West Point sports programs and into close touch with Cadet Blaik, the first West Pointer to compete against Navy in three sports.

But football was the MacArthur favorite. During the combat years ahead he was to call on officers who had played football at West Point for tough and dangerous assignments.

The mottoes by which Gen. MacArthur lived: "Duty, Honor, Country" ... and ... "There is no substitute for victory" ... became all-important to

Cadet Blaik as did the words MacArthur delivered in a speech during his two-year tour-of-duty as Superintendent, oft-quoted lines inscribed over the entrance to the South Gymnasium:

"Upon the fields of friendly strife are sown the seeds that, upon other fields on other days, will bear the fruits of victory."

But 2nd Lt. Blaik had a way to go after leaving West Point before he found his career. It wasn't until he was six years out of the Academy at the age of 29 that he became an assistant coach and it was another eight years, at age 37, before he became a head coach.

Caught up in the drag of a peacetime Army, Blaik resigned his commission in February of 1922 and headed home from Fort Bliss.

"The day after I arrived back in Dayton (March 17), I received a letter that had been forwarded. It came from Gen. MacArthur who was about to be assigned to the Philippines. He wanted me to go along as his aide. If the letter had been written a day earlier I would have withdrawn my resignation and gone with MacArthur to become a career soldier."

Instead, it was "what next?" He had taken business courses with pre-law and so he went into real estate and insurance, from there, into house-building with his father. He made money and got married.

Meanwhile, he had begun a correspondence with Gen. MacArthur concerning the sorry brand of football being

He was always, simply, Ernie. He could have been dubbed the "Minnesota Mauler" or the "Stanford Smasher" or the "Duluth Dynamo". But Ernie was sufficient. Ernie was Ernie Nevers, and nobody ever confused this Ernie with baseball's Ernie (Lombardi), because baseball's Ernie did have a nickname (Schnozz), shared with a non-player named Durante. But Ernie Nevers knew the value of nicknames.

It was 1967, and Ernie was now a vice president of one of the first major league soccer teams in the United States, the Oakland Clippers. He called the team's PR man into his office. He said, "We have fine players. We have to sell these players to the public so that people will buy tickets to see them. The public must have players they can identify with—players whose names they can pronounce." Ernie was making estimable sense, considering that the Clippers were rostered with a dozen or so Yugoslavians: a Milosevic, a Stojanovic, a Davidovic and a Lukic and a Gavric. Even a Cop, pronounced "chop."

"Let's," said Ernie, "come up with some nicknames for these guys." And so Cop became "The Chopper," and Gavric became "Gabbo," a name he was to carry into a short-lived career as an NFL placekicker.

"Nicknames," said the supreme football player who never needed one, "are terribly important in American sports."

Of course. Would William W. Heffelfinger have become a living collegiate football legend if he had not been, early on, nicknamed "Pudge"? There is meaning and amiability to a "Pudge." There is stuffiness to a William W. Heffelfinger, Yale guard.

Nicknamery

Nicknames humanize athletes, make them more embraceable to the fan, give them an identity beyond their un-nicknamed colleagues, furnish them a personal sense of status.

Nicknames in football tend to be positional. The glamour positions are normally the nicknamed positions. Or at least they used to be. Writers of two or more decades ago fancied nicknames; today's scribes, in their effort to appear more sophisticated, less gee-whiz, don't reach for a nickname as much as the older typists. And when they do, their efforts lack the catchiness of nicknames of yore.

For example: During San Francisco's 1981 Super Bowl season, a newspaper there (the Chronicle) ran a contest to pick a nickname for the team's brilliant, ex-Notre Dame quarterback, Joe Montana.

In days gone by, he might have been "Jumpin' Joe" or even "Jo Jo," although not "Joltin' Joe," because there should never be more than one of those (DiMaggio).

The contest winner? "Big Sky" Montana, after the nickname of the state. Not good. Not in the great tradition of great nicknames. Certainly not equal to such quarterback sobriquets as "Slingin' Sammy" Baugh, "Dandy Don" Meredith, "Chuckin' Charley" Conerly, "Broadway Joe" Namath, "Sonny" (whose Christian name was indeed Christian) Jurgensen. "Big Sky" indeed. Why not, realistically, just "Big Joe"?

They don't make 'em like they used to, dub-wise. Not even when it comes to a "Dub" Jones.

Today's running backs, aside from the rare "Butch" (Woolfolk), are people called Marcus and Earl, or Walter and Chuck.

Whatever happened to the likes of "Squirmin' Herman" Wedemeyer—(St. Mary's), Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice (North Carolina), Alan "The Horse" Ameche (Wisconsin)? And where's the graphic grandeur of an Elroy "Crazy-legs" Hirsch (another Badger)? Now there were running back nicknames. Certainly, ones with more verbal class than an O.J., which was catchy, to be sure, or at least catchier than Simpson's given Orenthal James.

Nickname-rife teams are winning teams. For instance, Indiana's 1945 Big Ten champs had a "Hunchy" Hoernschmeyer, a "Pistol Pete" Pihos, a "Klu" in eventual baseball slugger Ted Kluszewski.

But here in 1982, we have munchies, not Hunchys.

Can it be that there are so many nicknames for things that we have lost our interest (and imagination) in nick-naming people? Maybe. Perhaps in the example of pro linebacker Jack "Hack-saw" Reynolds we are seeing a trend toward nicknaming people as things. Basketball players now call themselves "Truck" and "Tree"; quarterback Ron Jaworski of the Philadelphia Eagles, is a "Rifle" of the Polish variety. Is this trend depriving our sports stars of flesh and blood?

Ah, blood.

There was, in football's youth, a Johnny "Blood," a vagabond from Wisconsin and Minnesota, a Notre Dame dropout in the year of the "Four Horsemen" (the all-time collective football nickname, unless you fancy the line play of Fordham's "Seven Blocks of Granite" or the Vikings' "Purple People Eaters" defensive fellows).

Johnny Blood, a triple-threater (and four-sport letter winner at St. John's in Collegeville, Minn., in the early 1920s), played with Ernie at Duluth and with Byron "Whizzer" White (the all-time nicknamed U.S. Supreme Court Justice) for the early Pittsburgh Steelers.

Johnny Blood, in the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, was John Victor McNally. But, one night in Minneapolis he was walking past a movie house with St. John's teammate Ralph Hanson and spotted a marquee plugging Rudolph Valentino's "Blood and Sand."

"I grabbed Ralph's arm," John Victor McNally said, years later. "There are our names," I said. "I'll be 'Blood' and you be 'Sand.'"

Johnny Blood. Self-nicknamed. Likely the finest, most apt tag in football history.

The game's early names, nicked or otherwise, tend to pale when "Blood" is shed. Before the century turned, on the Yale line with "Pudge" was a fellow they called "Lonny," who, as the football years passed, would never be referred to as less than Amos Alonzo Stagg. He coached (at Chicago and University of the Pacific) longer than most people live. But "Lonny" once it was.

Edgar Allan Poe, the poet's grand-nephew, played for Princeton while "Pudge" and "Lonny" were at Harvard, (1889) but, was never nicknamed "the Raven," or, even, "The Tapper." Shame.

The Ivy League also produced the forerunning nickname of quarterback Y.A. Tittle, sometimes called "Yat" instead of Yelverton Abraham. The early "Yat" was "Tad"—Thomas Albert Dwight Jones; "Tad" Jones played for Yale, then coached at Syracuse and Yale. Coaching at Notre Dame at about that time was a human nickname, one "Shorty" Longman, mentor of "The Rock," future Irish coach Knute Rockne, mentor of "The Gipper." Nickname chains used to be endless.

Earl "Red" Blaik coached, at West Point, Felix "Doc" Blanchard and Glenn "Junior" Davis. But Earle "Greasy" Neale, was coached at Canton by Jim "Chief" Thorpe, who led Carlisle to victory in 1912 against a Cadet club featuring halfback Dwight David "Ike" Eisenhower. "Greasy" coached neither Army nor Harold "Red" Grange, also known as "The Galloping Ghost" and "The Wheaton Iceman" in his University of Illinois days.

"The Galloping Ghost" should be rated second in nicknamery to Johnny "Blood," unless you fancy "Bruiser" Kinard or "Bucko" Kilroy or "Mean Joe" Greene or "Biggie" Goldberg or "Yabbo" Yablonski or "Night Train" Lane or "Bear" Bryant or "Bulldog" Turner or "Thrill" Hill or "Bronko" Nagurski or "Run John Run" Isenbarger or "Tank" Younger or "Pop" Warner or "Ziggy" Czarowski or "Brick" Muller or "King" McElhenny or "Ducky" Pond or "Germany" Schulz or "Hollywood" Henderson or "Alley Oop" Owens or "Rosey" Grier or "Wrong Way" Riegels or "Moose" Krause or "Scrap Iron" Fisk or "Hurry" Cain or "Hopalong" Cassidy or "Buddy" Young or, as a last resort, "Gabbo" Gavric, (nicknamed, as you recall, by Ernie Nevers) whose first name was Momcilo.

It's not that Ernie minded the name Momcilo. It's just that Ernie, who never needed a nickname, knew the value of one: currency for a career.

NATION'S BEST IN OFFENSE

Right up there with Carter and Washington are Tennessee's Willie Gault, Mississippi State's Glen Young, Ohio State's Gary Williams, Penn State's Kenny Jackson, the Pitt pair of Dwight Collins and Julius Dawkins, Darius Durham of San Diego State, Wayne Capers of Kansas, Eric Mark of Kansas State, Tulane's Robert Griffin, UCLA's Cormac Carney, Paul Skansi of Washington, Indiana's Duane Gunn and Henry Ellard of Fresno State.

The Big Eight and SEC seem to have a near monopoly on top-flight tight ends like Nebraska's Jamie Williams, John Chesley of Oklahoma State, Missouri's Andy Gibler, Chris Faulkner of Florida and LSU's Malcolm Scott. However, BYU's Gordon Hudson led the nation's tight ends a year ago with 67 catches for 960 yards and West Virginia's Mark Raugh wasn't far behind with 61 receptions.

Another old football axiom is that games are won and lost in the pits, that gray area normally known as the line of scrimmage. Coaches live for the day when their team can "dominate the line of scrimmage."

Southern Cal has two of the best at doing just that—275-pound tackle Don Mosebar and 260-pound guard Bruce Matthews. Mosebar, a senior, has been a starter since the first game of his freshman year—three days before his 18th birthday—and Coach John Robinson puts the big fellow "in the same mold as USC's other recent All-America tackles, Marvin Powell and Keith Van Horne."

Matthews has played every interior line position at USC and line coach Hudson Houck says he "could be a star at any of them. He's a highly intelligent guy who's very mature, very determined and very motivated. He's excellent at both run and pass blocking."

"Bruce Matthews," echoes Robinson, "is in the same league as our other recent All-America guards—Pat Howell, Brad Budde and Roy Foster."

The University of California has a great tackle in 270-pound Harvey Salem, a four-year starter. In 32 starts over his first three years, he was graded Cal's top offensive lineman 25 times. The pro scouts regard Salem as perhaps the best pass-blocker in the collegiate ranks because of Cal's passing philosophy over the years. He also has earned first-team All-Academic honors in the Pac-10 in each of the last two seasons.

Statistics are not kept for offensive linemen, outside of grading films, but Houston scored 18 rushing touchdowns during the 1981 regular season and eight of them went behind the blocking of 263-pound tackle Maceo Fifer. In the same class are Alfred Mohammed of Arkansas, Duke's Robert Oxendine, Florida's Dan Fike, David Lutz of Georgia

Dan Marino is Pittsburgh's all-time leading passer with over 6,000 yards.

Tech, Karl Nelson of Iowa State, Mississippi's Pat Phenix, Nebraska's Randy Theiss, Jimbo Covert and Bill Fralic of Pitt, Eric Moran of Washington and Wisconsin's Bob Winckler.

David Drechsler, a 250-pound guard, played a major role in North Carolina tailbacks rushing for 2,179 yards and scoring 29 touchdowns a year ago. He was the most consistent performer in an outstanding line and is capable of playing any of the five interior positions.

Ohio State's 262-pound Joe Lukens has started every game for three years, except for the 1979 opener as a freshman. He played tackle that year and guard in 1980 and '81 and logged more playing time last year than any other member of the Buckeyes' offensive unit.

Wayne Harris of Mississippi State is a 285-pound player who won the Jacobs Award as the top blocker in the Southeastern Conference last season. Other guards to watch include Arkansas' Steve Korte, Hawaii's Jesse Sapolu and Doug Dawson of Texas.

Placekickers, of course, are offensive weapons, too. Georgia's Kevin Butler converted 19 of 26 field goal attempts last year, while fellow freshman Larry Roach of Oklahoma State was 19 for 28. Others in that class include Washington's Chuck Nelson, Luis Zendejas of Arizona State, Bruce Kallmeyer of Kansas, Rutgers' Alex Falcinelli and Mark Harmon of Stanford.

played at West Point and the desire to coach began to grow. He signed on as an assistant at his alma mater; then it was on to Wisconsin as assistant to George Little; and back to West Point to join Biff Jones' staff.

Now the house-builder from Dayton was really hooked. In December of 1933, a pair of ex-Dartmouth backs, Eddie Dooley and Red Lowden, together with Dartmouth President Ernest M. Hopkins, convinced Red to take over in Hanover, N.H., as the Big Green's head coach.

Red was on his way. In seven years his Dartmouth teams compiled a 45-15-4 record, winning Ivy League crowns in 1936-37. In an undefeated string (19-0-3) his team never lost a game to the Big Three of Harvard, Yale and Princeton.

At Dartmouth he coached the great two-way back, Bob MacLeod, everybody's All-America. It was during these years that Red learned more about the winning spirit, about team-play and about comebacks. He also learned about training procedures and treatment of injuries from Roland (Beaver) Bevan who he brought in from Ohio and who he took with him to West Point along with his entire staff.

It was Lt. Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger who, as West Point Superintendent, brought Blaik back to The Point as head football coach. He valued football on the same high plane as Gen. MacArthur and he had the same feeling about the man he was putting in the hotseat.

On the practice field that spring and fall of 1941, he scrimmaged the players until they learned some football if for no other reason than self-preservation. He worked all the harder in the knowledge that he had far less time with his players than any college coach in the land, not to mention the fact that the blue chip recruits, shooting for the pros, just didn't want to go to a military academy with its commitment to the Army after graduation.

"That 1942 plebe squad was a good one and the suspension of the rule against playing freshmen meant we could use them on the varsity. In practice for the Notre Dame game, the plebes ran the T-formation offense, which Frank Leahy had installed for the Irish, and ran it so well against the varsity we adopted the T ourselves," Blaik explained.

The original class of '44 was graduated in '43 as the Academy accelerated its schedule to meet the demands of the military, which meant the loss of the All-America team captain, Robin Olds. But, among the incoming plebes was a player from Bonita High School in LaVerne, Calif. who Red had learned about from a Dartmouth dramatics professor.

"His name—Glenn Davis, nicknamed Junior: 172 lbs., strong as a bear, and the greatest, fastest, most dangerous running back I ever saw."

The following year Felix (Doc) Blanchard arrived from Louisiana. He was the 6-0, 208-lb. fullback Blaik so badly needed to complement Glenn Davis, and he was only a half-step slower than Junior.

"Blanchard had to be exceptional to stand out in that plebe group, the strongest in Academy history. The upper class team, headed by Doug Kenna, shared playing time that '44 season with the plebe team, headed by Tom Lombardo."

With such talent and a head coach at the peak of his ability, Army was off on a rampage which saw the Black Knights go 9-0 in 1944, 9-0 in 1945 and 9-0-1 in 1946, a year in which only Notre Dame, with a 0-0 tie, was able to stop Mr. Outside, Davis and Mr. Inside, Blanchard.

Army ran an all-winning string of 25 games before the deadlock with Notre Dame and an unbeaten string of 32 before Columbia beat them in Baker Field in 1947.

In 1948, Army was 8-0-1; in 1949 they went 9-0; and in 1950, they were 8-1. From 1943-1950, Blaik's Cadet teams were 64-5-5. It had to be one of the greatest coaching jobs ever turned in anytime, anywhere.

In 1951, the corps of cadets was rocked by a scandal which led to the ouster of 90 Cadets, including 35 football players, one of them Blaik's own son, Bob, the varsity quarterback. The Academy lost a lot of top people with tremendous potential.

But, with the encouragement of Gen. MacArthur and Gen. Eichelberger, Blaik stayed on to bring back Army football to its peak once again with the unbeaten 1958 club, which featured one of the most talked-about innovations since the advent of the forward pass.

It was the "Lonely End" offense, featuring Bill Carpenter, the far flanker who never entered the huddle yet received the plays from quarterback Joe Caldwell in some mysterious, remote-control fashion. Blaik's brainchild also featured Bob Anderson and Pete Dawkins, the best pair of halfbacks on one team in years, the "Gregarious End," Don Usry, and guard Bob Novogratz, the sword and flame of a remarkable defensive unit.

The Lonely End club won eight games, including Penn State and Notre Dame, and tied Pittsburgh. It was a fitting swan-song season for Earl "Red" Blaik.

At the age of 62, Red accepted a long-standing offer from old friend Victor Emanuel, chairman of Avco Corp., as a vice president of a management group which was doing research in missiles and space exploration, and thus began a whole new career.

TOP DEFENSIVE PLAYERS IN THE COUNTRY

Tim Krumrie has amassed 201 solo tackles at Wisconsin.

End Billy Ray Smith is an Arkansas standout.

Almost 50 years after his death, the admonition of Coach Daniel Earle McGugin—"Get in there and knock the giblets out of 'em"—still remains the key to great defensive football play.

McGugin coached Vanderbilt during the early days of college football, but looking at the defensive giants returning to action for 1982, he couldn't have given better advice.

The crop of the interior defensive linemen, the tackles, noseguards and middle guards is especially talented, with Wisconsin's Tim Krumrie leading the parade as a returning consensus All-America middle guard.

Krumrie was named National Defensive Player of the Week after the Michigan opener last fall and he wound up one of the semifinalists in the Lombardi Award voting. A three-year starter for the Badgers, Tim has 201 solo and 122 assisted tackles.

Georgia's Jimmy Payne, a 243-pound junior tackle, has been tabbed the fiercest pass rusher at Georgia, and perhaps in the Southeast Conference, since Bill Stanfill played for the Bulldogs in 1968.

Rick Bryan of Oklahoma was named All-Big Eight and the most valuable lineman in the '81 Sun Bowl game.

George Achica of USC made the All-Pac-10 team as a soph and junior noseguard and second team All-America last season. His biggest play came against UCLA when the Bruins, with four seconds left and trailing 22-21, lined up for a 46-yard field goal. Achica, who had a bruised right shoulder, broke through to block the kick with his left arm.

South Carolina's big name is Andrew Provencher, 6-3 and 260, who is clocked in 4.8, bench presses 480 pounds and has a 33½ inch vertical leap. He also made a school record 157 tackles last year as a defensive tackle, 19 against national champion Clemson.

Shamus McDonough, the 276-pound "One Man Gang" for Iowa State, had 55 unassisted tackles, broke up seven passes and intercepted one, and he totaled 21 tackles against Nebraska, along with a fumble recovery and an interception.

His performance against Nebraska, when he recorded eight tackles, two sacks and two fumble recoveries earned Iowa's Mark Bortz Sports Illustrated's Defensive Player of the Week honors. All-Big Ten first team tackle as a junior, he has scored twice on fumble recoveries, against Wisconsin and UCLA.

Reggie Singletary of Kansas State has 4.7 speed, high jumps 6-6 and was voted to the Sophomore All-America team by Football News and Big Eight Newcomer of the Year.

Gurnest Brown, Maryland's senior tackle, bench presses 365 pounds and weighs 278 pounds, and his credentials include 81 tackles last year.

An outstanding defensive lineman in the Western Athletic Conference is Falaniko Noga of Hawaii, who is the only player in the conference to earn first team honors as a freshman and sophomore. He stands 6-1 and weighs 220 and has 4.59 speed and great quickness. Noga presses over 400 pounds and has been named to Blue Chip All-America freshman and sophomore first teams.

Pitt's strong defensive line should be anchored by Dave Puzzuoli, defensive tackle, and J.C. Pelusi, middle guard. The former had five unassisted tackles against Georgia in the Sugar Bowl, five unassisted against Penn State and seven against Syracuse. The latter had seven unassisted tackles against Boston College, seven against Syracuse, five against Penn State and eight against Georgia.

Louisiana State offers Ramsey Dardar, senior noseguard, with a two-season total of 159 solo tackles and 11 sacks for -64 yards, plus 14 tackles behind the line for -43 yards, along with five fumble recoveries and three blocked kicks.

West Virginia's Peach Bowl champions

like Todd Campbell, senior tackle.

Southern Methodist's Michael Carter was Most Valuable Player in the 1980 Holiday Bowl with nine tackles and a deflected pass against BYU. He holds four NCAA indoor and outdoor track and field championships, but was injured much of last year.

University of Miami's Tony Chickillo was the school's second leading tackler. His dad, Nick, was an All-America guard for the Hurricanes in 1952.

Syracuse rates Mike Charles as the best defensive tackle prospect since Joe Ehrmann, while Auburn's Donnie Humphrey had nine solos and six assisted tackles against Nebraska and he's known as the big play man of the SEC.

Texas A&M has outstanding young tackles in soph Ray Childress (6-6 and 260) and Keith Guthrie, a junior who had 11 tackles against Houston.

Junior William Fuller led North Carolina's No. 8-ranked team with 60 solo hits and 24 assists and was named All-ACC as a soph, as well as Football News' top soph defensive player.

Reggie White, most valuable player for Tennessee in the Vols' Garden State Bowl victory, was team defensive player of the week three times.

Ohio State's Jerome Foster has been All-Big Ten the last two years and is rated the best Buckeye pass rusher and the man hardest to block.

Among other defensive linemen to watch are Charlie Pattison of Wyoming, a bull-dogger in the rodeo circuit; Kevin Belcher of Texas-El Paso; Joe Valentino, a very quick tackle for Delaware; Utah State's Shawn Miller; Junior Poles, Boston College's tackle who had 10 unassisted tackles in a victory over Texas A&M; John Daniel of Brown; Jerald Baylis of Southern Mississippi, Defensive MVP of the 1980 Independence Bowl; George Dunlap of Pacific; and Jim Ettari of The Citadel, named to the Southern Conference first team.

Defensive ends are shy in numbers but high in quality, with Billy Ray Smith of Arkansas returning after earning All-America honors as a junior. He had 72 tackles last year, with his big game against Texas A&M when he stopped fourth-down plays twice and caused a fumble which ended the last Aggie drive.

Walker Lee Ashley of Penn State tied a school record by causing four fumbles last year, and in addition had nine tackles for losses and six quarterback sacks.

Minnesota is counting on Fred Orgas, a three-year starter, who had 66 solo tackles and 64 assists, including 19 for 85 yards in losses. He's a two-time All-Big Ten Academic first team pick who is recovering from a broken right hand suffered during spring practice. Southern California needs a healthy Byron Darby this fall, with the senior coming off a severe ankle sprain which handicapped him last year. Despite missing four games, he wound up tied for ninth in tackles with 74, including seven for losses.

Michael Woods, a 210-pound senior, is expected to carry on the tradition at Pitt, where his 1981 statistics revealed 13 sacks, five fumbles recovered, nine passes deflected and 96 total tackles.

Billy Jackson of Mississippi State was named first team all-conference as a soph last year and to the AP third-team All-America. He also was named National Defensive Player of the Week in MSU's 1980 upset of then No. 1 Alabama.

Charles Benson of Baylor twice has been named All-Southwest Conference and is a strong honors candidate this fall. Navy has a bonafide honors candidate in Travis Wallington, a big play man who has blocked three punts including two against Yale which set up 12 points for the Midshipmen, while Oregon is pushing Mike Walter, who made a crucial fumble recovery which resulted in a 7-7 tie with USC in 1980. New Mexico's Jimmy Carter was named All-Western Athletic Conference with eight tackles and 10 assists against Houston, and eight tackles and seven assists, plus a fumble recovery against Utah.

Mike Pitts of Alabama was named to the Football News All-America second team, while 'Bama's Jackie Cline led interior linemen in tackles with 55.

Others who have credentials if not the exposure include Jeff Maddux of Illinois State; Jody Schulz of East Carolina; Mike Tussell of Toledo; Greg Burkus of Yale; and George Tillman of Southern Mississippi, named to the AP All-South Independent team his soph and junior years.

Linebackers are the most numerous of the defensive nominations for honors and Ohio State's Glen Cobb and Marcus Marek are two of the best. Marek was named A.P. second team All-America the last two years while Cobb has amazing quickness for his 6-3, 212-pound frame.

Ohio State linebacker Marcus Marek's great range finds him in on most OSU tackles.

Coach Bill Yeoman says of Weedy Harris, "If there is a better linebacker running around someone should rule him illegal since Harris can control a game if not double or triple-teamed." They call him Houston's best linebacker in the last 10 years.

Auburn's Chris Martin returned a blocked field goal for a touchdown against Georgia Tech and a week later returned a blocked punt for a touchdown against Mississippi State. He can bench press 450 pounds and leg presses 1,100 pounds.

Oklahoma has a great pair of linebackers in Thomas Benson and Jackie Shipp, rated by Sooner coaches as the two best linebackers to play at the same time in school history.

California's tandem of Ron Rivera and Rich Dixon ranks among the best in the west. Rivera's 99 tackles included 17 against Georgia and Herschel Walker. Dixon missed last season with a knee injury, but is strong and has good speed and hitting ability.

Arizona has Ricky Hunley who was named to the All-Pac-10 first team as a soph last year. His two-year total is 124 unassisted and 93 assisted tackles plus seven sacks.

West Virginia has Dennis Fowlkes and Darryl Talley, with the latter named to several All-America second and third teams and the former considered to be in the class of Sam Huff and Chuck Howley.

Jeff Leiding has been moved to middle linebacker after finishing as the fourth-leading tackler at Texas as a soph and is considered the most physical Longhorn linebacker since Tommy Nobis.

Louisiana State's Albert Richardson has 333 solo tackles for his three seasons, after setting an all-time LSU record for a soph with 129 solos, a record he broke as a junior with 150 solos.

Ricky Goff of Tulane had his best game in a victory over LSU when he turned in eight unassisted and five assisted tackles, two passes deflected and a fumble recovered.

Michigan rates Robert Thompson an honors candidate while Duke rates Emmett Tilley among the Atlantic Coast Conference's best.

Andy Ponseigo of the U.S. Naval Academy had 13 tackles against Michigan and eight against Ohio State in the Liberty Bowl in addition to being a steady hitter on Navy's baseball team.

At USC they call August Curley "Mr.

Consistency" and the 223-pound senior doesn't disappoint the Trojan boosters. He scored in double figures in tackles in eight of his 11 starts last year, topped by 13 against Stanford, Notre Dame and UCLA.

Notre Dame's tradition of great linebackers continues with Mark Zavagnin, a 225-pound senior with 219 career tackles.

Pro Football Weekly named Washington's Mark Stewart to its first team a year ago when he had 60 tackles and 38 assists, and he's almost certain to be named to honor teams this fall.

Jerome Boyd of Oregon State had his best game with 17 tackles against Washington State, but he added 13 against Oklahoma and 14 against USC. His 328 defensive points led the squad a year ago.

Southern Methodist's Gary Moten averaged 15 tackles a game, including a high of 21 against Texas.

Arizona State's Vernon Maxwell possesses running back speed, quickness and size (6-2, 225). His junior statistics include 91 tackles, 54 solos, nine sacks and six for losses, three passes deflected, two intercepted, three fumbles caused and one fumble recovered.

Thomas Hubbard of Ole Miss had 18 tackles against Georgia to highlight his soph season; Jay Fairman of Utah was second on the team in tackles; Rich Raffin of Northwestern had 27 (16 solo) against Arkansas last year; Washington State's Ken Emmil had 14 tackles against UCLA, 11 against USC and 10 against Arizona State and Washington; and Texas Christian's Joe Hines led the defense in tackles with 139, 91 unassisted.

Wilbur Marshall of Florida had 121 tackles including a school record 11 sacks. Minnesota's Mike Robb missed half of last year with a knee injury after a great soph season, but reports no pain this fall in the switch from free safety to outside linebacker. Nebraska's Steve Damkroger was the Huskers' leading tackler with 116, while Washington State's Lee Blakeney led the Cougars in tackling his freshman and soph years, with his best performance last year—16 against Colorado and 15 against UCLA.

Tommy Young, a converted fullback, is Florida State's nominee while Chris DeCristo earned second team Frosh All-America honors last year for Nevada-Las Vegas. New Mexico's Johnny Jackson earned National Player of the Week honors from Sports Illustrated by scoring 19 tackles against Utah, a performance which also earned ABC Player of the Year for the state by the Roanoke Times and World News, and All-Southern Conference first team; Ray Bentley, Central Michigan's Mid-American all-league player; Leo Barker, New Mexico State's top tackler who is in his fourth year as a starter and possesses great speed; David Howard of Long Beach State was injured part of last season but wound up fifth in tackles; and Larry Alleyne of Northern Illinois, moved from defensive end to linebacker last year.

Picking up some of the less-publicized players, there are: Melvin Rucker of VMI, voted Defensive Player of the Year for the state by the Roanoke Times and World News, and All-Southern Conference first team; Ray Bentley, Central Michigan's Mid-American all-league player; Leo Barker, New Mexico State's top tackler who is in his fourth year as a starter and possesses great speed; David Howard of Long Beach State was injured part of last season but wound up fifth in tackles; and Larry Alleyne of Northern Illinois, moved from defensive end to linebacker last year.

where he was the squad's most valuable player.

Jim Devine of Marshall, Kelly George of Ball State, and Ron Thomas at Northern Arizona, and Ricky Sanders of Northeast Louisiana, along with Russ Hedderly of Kent State, are sleepers to watch.

Speed is the key to the cornerbacks this fall.

Butch LaCroix of Houston finished third nationally in interceptions. He was named to Southwest Conference first teams and had All-America honorable mention and has 4.5 speed.

A bright spot at Colorado are the corners, Victor Scott and Clyde Riggins, with the latter's five interceptions leading the Big Eight.

Greg Poole was an All-Atlantic Coast corner last year for North Carolina.

Eric Williams of North Carolina State led the ACC in interceptions with seven last year after missing the 1980 season with an ankle injury.

Oregon likes Steve Brown, a cornerback who takes pleasure in returning kickoffs.

In Penn State's upset of Pitt, Roger Jackson intercepted one pass, caused another interception, caused a fumble and had nine tackles. He led the Nittany Lions with five interceptions.

Ken Thomas of San Jose State returned an interception 89 yards for a score in his first college game and he needs just one more interception for a touchdown to set an NCAA career record. He caught and passed Herschel Walker in the 400-meter relay in the 1981 NCAA Track and Field championships.

Russell Carter of Southern Methodist intercepted seven passes to share the SWC leadership. He's a school record holder in 400 meters at 46.01 and ran the anchor leg on the second fastest relay team in college last year.

FOOTBALL FILMS The Nitty Gritty of Victory or Defeat

by Orville Henry,
Arkansas GAZETTE

When he hits a college campus on a Thursday in football season, preparing for a Saturday afternoon NCAA Football telecast, Frank Broyles heads for the nearest film projector.

"The TV crew kids me about it, and the truth is, I really don't need to see the teams on film that much. It's just that I can't help it. I'm a football film nut."

The University of Arkansas athletic director (his teams won 72 percent of their games for him when he coached there, 1958-76) recalls exactly when he got hooked.

In the late 1930s, when he was a 13-year-old ninth grader, Broyles entered a game after his Decatur High team (in an Atlanta suburb) had piled up a huge lead. He played blocking back and, once, punted.

When the squad looked at the game on film, Frank's mates whooped and hollered at the sight of this 13-year-old redhead hitting a spiral that carried over the head of the other team's safety. He might as well have been Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

Thus began 40-odd years of doting on football movies.

And a good thing. No coach—or player—in football could last a day if he wasn't ready to spend much of it gazing at hurtling images on the flickering screen, over, and over, and over.

When someone talks about a "new wrinkle" in football today, he is referring to something new to that team, not to football. Once taking films of practices and games became routine, more or less standardized after World War II, secrets became a thing of the past.

The trick now is not trickery, but execution.

Films play a big part in this. At any given point in a season, for instance, a team will put an army of assistant coaches to cutting up every practice and game reel so that every trap play run will go on one reel, every hook pass on another, every type of defense on others, etc. A player doesn't want for examples.

A coach might want for eyes. "The most important course I took in high school, I've decided," said one young student assistant, "was audio-visual aides. How to splice film and handle projectors. No staples, no bubble gum. If you were good, you could change a bulb."

If a head coach has immediate access to a film, he's been known to rush from the locker room after a game so he can find out immediately what really happened.

FOOTBALL FILMS

Usually the staff (in shifts, sometimes worked around church) begins at 7:30 Sunday morning to grade each player on each play for technique and effort. This is usually done in two rooms, one staffed by the offensive staff, one by the defensive staff.

Late that afternoon, players and coaches assemble for viewing of the graded film. This is a critical time for everyone. Each player sees himself at his best and at his worst—in the company of his peers, his coaches supplying the commentary.

All day Sunday, student aides "break down" the most recent film of the next week's opponent, putting the findings into a computer, often as not. This takes four hours per film. Frequently, more than one film is available.

Sunday night, the staff (again, divided) will begin studying films of the other team.

"That's all we do," says one assistant coach, "on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday. We can't get enough, see enough film of the other team. We meet and watch film, break and watch film alone, break and show film to the squad, take time out for practice, come back after supper to study the practice film, then go back to looking at film of the opponent."

There is a letup on Wednesday.

On Thursday morning, some staff members look at films of high school games, part of the recruiting process, while others go back through a restored, complete movie of the opponents' last effort, trying to get a "feel" for the team as well as looking for tipoffs as to plays.

It is still true that a quarterback, running back, receiver, or lineman can and may tip the direction a play is going by some mannerism. This is always subject to film scrutiny.

Canny coaches designate one coach to scout his own team in the films, looking for giveaways.

For a period in the 1970s, as an economy measure, it was against the rules for an NCAA team to scout an opponent in person. This would save maybe $500, maybe more in travel expenses, it was reasoned.

This rule was soon rescinded.

Football coaches found that they didn't miss so much the report of the scout who had actually attended the game. They mainly asked him about atmosphere and mood of the game, wind and weather at the site; everything else would be in the film.

As it turned out, the main function of the scout was to pick up the game film.

On a given Saturday in the fall, an Arkansas scout, for example, will watch Texas play Oklahoma at Dallas, then fly to Austin, not back to Fayetteville, so that he can pick up the Texas-Oklahoma game film the moment it has been processed, then fly home to Fayetteville. On the same Saturday, the Texas scout will see Arkansas play Texas Tech at Little Rock and fly to Fayetteville, not Austin, so that he could be on the spot for his copy of that film, then fly it to Austin.

Game films are an essential tool of the college football staff.

Nothing is more important to a coach after a game than getting the film of the next opponent in time for use early Sunday.

Do films tell everything?

Not really. They tend to be two-dimensional. But a coach sees so much of any one player for two, three, four years, he can spot him instantly.

"When an official asked me to name my captains before a kickoff, I'd name them," said a former coach. "I never knew them by numbers. After looking at that film every day, I could tell one 100 yards away by the way he held his head, or his hands, anything."

More crucially, line coaches wish they had film from the end zone, to show whether a defensive man is lined up on the nose of, on the shoulder of, or outside of an offensive lineman, including the intermediate shadings. Indeed, until NCAA legislation barred it (again for cost cutting reasons), many teams stationed a coach in the end zone with a Polaroid camera and a runner. Spacings would be photographed, then rushed to the sidelines.

Film itself may or may not be on the way out, victim of one more electronic revolution.

Videotape is so much cheaper since it doesn't have to be processed. It can be used over and over again, so many teams now use video equipment rather than regular cameras.

At the moment, film is much easier to edit and store. Many teams use videotape to record practices, film for games and thus, teaching reels that are to be stored. (The print that is returned by the opponent is the one that gets cut up.)

Eventually, equipment for editing videotape will become simpler and cheaper and use of film may be curtailed.

Whatever, no coach will ever be clear of the need to spend some of almost every working day looking at, studying those images on some sort of screen.

Is there any fun in this?

Oh, yes. There is excitement when, while charting Southern Cal, a coach gets his first look at a Greg Pruitt of Oklahoma doing two 90-degree changes in direction on one play. Or, when a Wichita State quarterback is seen turning away from the center on a two-point conversion attempt and suddenly lobbing the ball over his shoulder into the end zone to a tight end he hadn't even looked at.

Daily, for a coach, it's just like Hollywood, your basic agony and ecstasy, the nitty-gritty of victory and defeat.

Coach Bear Bryant calls Alabama's Jeremiah Castille, "pound for pound, the best player in the SEC." He led the league in interceptions with five and returned kickoffs for a 24.6-yard average to earn first team honors in the conference.

Among the corners to watch are Tyrone Smith of Tulane; Leonard Smith of McNeese State; Brent Dennis of Tulsa; and Jim Campbell of Yale, who returned a pass for a score against Dartmouth and recovered three fumbles along with two sacks.

Memphis State lists Marvin Chatman with 4.5 speed. Gill Byrd of San Jose State was among the leaders in interceptions in 1980 with seven, but was out two-thirds of the '81 season with a knee injury. Ray Horton, University of Washington, gained NEA Service All-America recognition and he's one of the top punt returners in the college ranks. David King of Auburn, as a freshman last year, blocked a punt against TCU and a field goal against Georgia Tech.

Indiana's Tim Wilbur was All-Big Ten as a soph and junior but missed last year with academic problems. He's returned interceptions 98, 70, 58 and 40 yards and a punt 60 yards for scores. Brigham Young's Tom Holmoe led the Western Athletic Conference in interceptions two years ago with seven while last year he was fourth in the team's overall defensive statistics. The major surprise last year may have been Bill Obremsky of Duke, who finished second in the ACC with six interceptions.

Three All-America players return at the safety positions, in Mike Richardson of Arizona State, Terry Kinard of Clemson and Tommy Wilcox of Alabama.

Wilcox, a junior last year, was recognized as one of the most honored football players in 'Bama history. Twice named to the All-Southeast Conference team, and an All-America, as well as SEC freshman of the year, he had 58 tackles last year, deflected 10 passes and intercepted three, and is a team leader.

Kinard, All-America as a junior, was the main reason Clemson had 23 interceptions last year, second best in school history. He was the first defensive back in Clemson history to be named an All-America and he earned it with 95 tackles and six interceptions.

Richardson, a senior, also was named All-Pac-10. He is second in ASU career interceptions with 16 and is second in career tackling among returning Sun Devil players with 218 stops (115 unassisted).

Notre Dame's Dave Duerson is playing his fourth season as a starter as an Irish captain.

Joey Browner of USC moved to safety after starting two years as a Trojan corner. Last year he led the secondary in pass deflections.

Vaughn Williams became the first Stanford defensive player to be named All-Pac-10 since 1978, and he was picked as a sophomore. Known as a reckless but deadly tackler on the blitz, Williams was named to the Soph All-America team by Blue Chips magazine.

Kevin Potter of Missouri was a consensus Big Eight pick last year. He's very proficient on the blitz.

Coach Joe Paterno of Penn State calls Mark Robinson "The best tackler we have had at Penn State since Jack Ham." Against Pitt he had a 91-yard interception return for a touchdown and set a school record for 108 yards in interception returns in that game.

Bob Harris, 6-2 and 212, has the ability and build to play tight ends one-on-one and strength-for-strength. The Auburn senior had 18 tackles against Georgia.

Andy Molls of Kentucky was All-SEC with 70 solo tackles and 42 assists.

Boston College is plugging George Radachowsky, a junior, who also is a .300 hitter in baseball. He has 4.5 speed and his two interceptions against Rutgers and Holy Cross turned the tide last season.

The University of Virginia is counting on the return of Pat Chester, who sat out last season after an injury in the second game of the season. In addition to his defensive statistics, Pat holds many of the school punt return records.

Mike Williams is a senior free safety for the U.S. Military Academy. He did not play freshman ball and was a walk-on as a soph, when he became the fourth-best tackler on squad. He was first last year with 90 tackles.

Among the other safeties, Cincinnati's Antonio Gibson was named All-Metro first team as the team's most valuable player. John Salley of Wyoming had his best games against Oklahoma and Brigham Young, with 11 tackles, and during the summer he's a rodeo performer. Keith Bostic of Michigan earned honorable mention on the All-America teams last year. Minnesota is counting on the healthy return of Rick Witthus, who suffered a shoulder injury which contributed to the late-season collapse of the Gopher pass defense.

Wisconsin has two candidates, David Greenwood, also a punter, and Matt Vandenberg, both 6-3 and 200 pounds. The latter was named to UPI's All-America team, while Greenwood had 6 interceptions.

Donnie Cook of East Tennessee State was named All-Southern Conference; Mark Bayless of Bowling Green tied a school record with 12 interceptions and was named to Mid-America teams twice. Mark Dorminey of Auburn has been plagued by injuries and has come off five operations to challenge for free safety honors, with his best showing 21 tackles against Nebraska. Auburn is also pushing Donnie Humphrey, a 6-2 senior who had 23 tackles against Georgia and Alabama.

Charles Armstead of Illinois has "cat-quick" reactions; Roger Foote of Kansas may be another "sleeper" who was handicapped by injury last year.

And if you don't think the caliber of these players will make picking the All-America defensive units tough for those selecting them, you haven't been paying attention.

TODAY IN THE PCAA

LONG BEACH STATE at UCLA

Strange as it sounds, Long Beach and UCLA will be opening the season in the Rose Bowl, which the Bruins now call home after vacating the L.A. Coliseum. Coach Dave Currey's 49ers, with Delta College transfer Todd Dillon at quarterback, are calling this the biggest game in the school's history. It may well be that but it will probably be far from the brightest unless the Beach gets every break imaginable. Elusive tailback Lenny Montgomery, brother of the Eagles' Wilbert, is Long Beach's biggest weapon against one of the Pac-10's better teams. He won't be enough. UCLA has quarterback Tom Ramsey and standout receivers Cormac Carney and Jojo Townsell back plus much more. They may be favored by five or more touchdowns.

CAL POLY-SLO at FRESNO STATE

Season opener for both clubs could be a dangerous one for hosting Fresno State. Jim Sweeney's Bulldogs, who closed out '81 strong have had the cloud of a PCAA investigation hanging over their heads and Cal Poly is annually one of the finest Division II squads in the West. The Mustangs are without long-time head coach Joe Harper (now at No.

Arizona) but do have 10 defensive starters back. The 'Dogs have plenty of proven offense in quarterback Jeff Tedford and receiver Henry Ellard and perhaps the PCAA's best kicking tandem in Rusty Karraker and Scott Darrow. Fresno will be a clear cut favorite but better not be caught looking ahead to Oregon next week.

UTAH STATE at TCU

Utah State is loaded with veterans from a team that tied this Southwest Conference foe on the road last year. Almost the entire offense returns but sophomore quarterback Doug Samuels, who won the job from senior Chico Canales, must show more than he did a year ago. Tackle Shawn Miller, linebacker Pat McKenna and safety Thomas Bates—each an All-PCAA'er in '81—head up the defense. TCU, meanwhile, is one of the SWC's mystery teams. Injuries killed the Horned Frogs last fall but they could be ready to break their perennial losing ways in '82. Home field advantage may decide it.

SAN JOSE STATE at OREGON

Coach Jack Elway's Spartans won two of their three meetings with the Pac-10 last year and look capable of making it three out of four today. Offensive superstars Gerald Willhite, Stacey Bailey and Mervyn Fernandez are all playing pro football now but San Jose is still loaded. Quarterback Steve Clarkson is back (he had 3,373 yds. passing last year and 28 TDs) as is favorite target Tim Kearse. Newcomers Eric Richardson (WR) and Bobby Johnson (RB) are considered on par with those departed. The defense has been underrated in the past, particularly the secondary, where Gill Byrd and Ken Thomas may form the best cornerback tandem in the West. Oregon is coming off a drubbing at the hands of Arizona State and appears ripe for another.

CAL STATE FULLERTON at BOISE STATE

The Titans will try to make it two in a row against the Big Sky at Boise after rallying to dump Northern Arizona, 19-15, last Saturday. The Broncos, who are visiting Pacific Memorial Stadium in two weeks, are an entirely different proposition, particularly at home. Winners of at least 10 games in each of the last three years, Boise will also have revenge as a motivating factor since Fullerton stung them, 20-17, last season. Junior quarterback Bob Caffrey came off the bench to lead the Titans past NAU and will be a key tonight.

McGahan — Thinking Man's Offensive Lineman

The offensive line is the bastion of big men and brute strength in football. Its inhabitants are the epitome of the game's power. But when one talks football with UOP senior guard Dan McGahan, he'd better be prepared to discuss the power of the mind as well as the body.

Although one of the strongest players on the entire Tiger squad (benching 435 lbs.), McGahan is not a subscriber to the theory that muscle and brawn are the only ingredients necessary to be a good lineman, despite the impressions the average fan has.

"People just don't understand how mental the game really is, particularly on the line," says McGahan. "They think all you do is knock heads."

"They see the physical part but don't see the concentration and techniques employed. They think you just line up and hit." McGahan, at 6-2, 250, can definitely throw his weight around with the best in the Pacific Coast Athletic Association (PCAA), but that wasn't always the case.

He arrived at Pacific as a 6-2, 225 pound freshman bench pressing only 205 pounds. As a prep and in his early years at UOP, he relied on brains and guile to get by.

"I like to think of myself as a mental-type player," says the 22-year-old graduate of Sacramento's El Camino High School. "I'm not a tremendous natural athlete and have worked hard to become more physical. But when I was less physical than I am now, I developed my understanding of the game in order to know more than the guy I'm up against—to be a smarter player."

And, of course, now that McGahan has become the equal of most collegiate players in the strength department, his intelligence has made him more than an equal in terms of overall ability and performance. Offensive coordinator Bill McQueary runs out of superlatives in describing his protege.

"Dan McGahan made a commitment to learn the game of football and to become an outstanding football player," says McQueary. "He has physically built himself without losing any speed or quickness and he knows what every member of the offensive line and backfield will be doing on every play."

"The mental aspects of the game are essential on the offensive line. Decisions have to be made very quickly. A player has to recognize the alignment he's facing, make calls, go on a pre-determined course and react. Once the ball's snapped, things happen quickly and if you screw up there's no chance to recover. Dan is able to play aggressively and react instinctively and correctly which is what makes him such a good guard."

The fifth-year senior (who will become UOP's first five-year letterman in '82) was an early recruit to the line and was offensive MVP at El Camino his senior year as an offensive guard and defensive tackle. "I was always bigger than everybody else which is why I became a lineman and also probably increased my liking for the sport," explains McGahan.

When he started college ball, McGahan was finally among his peers physically and learned that the offensive line is not the easiest place to step in and play right away.

"The O-line is tough and one of the hardest positions to learn and come right into," says McGahan. "It's like five guys working as one, or one big position."

"It's not like defense because if just one offensive lineman screws up, the whole play is ruined and injuries hurt because fitting in a new player is like putting a new part in an old machine. You've got to work with it until it fits right."

McGahan has obviously "fit right" because he's starting for the fourth consecutive year and was selected as one of the Tigers' tri-captains, along with George Dunlap and Gary Blackwell, for the 1982 season. It's a role he takes seriously.

"I perceive myself as a leader," says McGahan, with no trace of self-importance attached. "When I came in, I looked up to guys and watched. Now I've got to set an example because some younger players are watching me, asking me questions."

"I've always practiced hard but now I find myself practicing even harder." Head Coach Bob Toledo says leadership may be McGahan's finest trait, along with his enthusiasm and hard work habits. Hard work is something the tough red-head has learned a great deal about while rehabilitating and returning from two serious knee injuries during his career—the latest of which occurred in last year's season-opening victory over Central Michigan.

"I've had injuries and surgeries to both knees now so I don't have a fresh one available if it happens again," jokes McGahan, who will wear knee braces this fall. "But I don't like to think about injuries, pain is just something you learn to live with." One of the key stimulants in his recovery for the '82 season is the high hopes for both the offensive line and the Tiger team.

"The whole program has been through a real turnaround," he says. "The biggest change in the last three years has been the overall strength of the team, but mentally we're more ready to play and when we come out we know we're capable of winning and are planning on it."

"In some of the past years, injuries and inexperience have made the offensive line vulnerable, but now we're not only better but two-deep at every position. Plus, Bill McQueary is a tremendous coach. The team's improved and he's improved. I really enjoy working with him and if it's fun, you'll play so much better."

If McGahan has the season expected of him, he should be a frontrunner for All-PCAA honors come November. After that, he's not sure, but football might still be in the picture.

"I'd love to play more football," smiles McGahan, who knows the odds against making it in the professional game. "I don't know if I have the talent, but I know I've got the desire." His future should be rosy whether it's in football or not.

In accordance with his beliefs about the importance of the cerebral aspects of football, McGahan has been an above average student at UOP and will have two degrees, in interpersonal communications and print media communications, when he's through playing, plus a solid business emphasis. When the economy stabilizes, he wants to get into real estate, get a broker's license and eventually develop land.

But for now, he'll be working on further developing his own ample football talents. Some football players will go through the proverbial brick wall while others will figure out a way to go over or around it to get the job done. Dan McGahan can do it whichever way he chooses, which makes him more than just another offensive lineman.

Dan McGahan (66) leads the way for tailback Kirby Warren.

Blackwell: Tigers' "Mr. Versatility"

There are three basic football yardsticks for measuring the performance of a fullback—blocking, receiving and, of course, running.

Most fullbacks would be happy to be considered efficient in just one or two of these areas. UOP senior fullback Gary Blackwell is a rare specimen at his position. He's not just capable, but outstanding at each skill. For the non-believer, here's a sampling of what others have to say about the versatility of the 5-11, 205-pounder from Norwalk.

"There aren't too many backs that will take on a 260-pound defensive tackle head-to-head," says Tiger teammate Ken DeShano when questioned about Blackwell's blocking prowess. "By looking at him, size-wise, you can be deceived until he hits you a few times.

"He's quick, intense and his strength is surprising. He's a little powerhouse." So how about catching passes?

"Gary's as good as any back we have pass receiving-wise," says Bill Wolsky, Blackwell's understudy at fullback. Wolsky's words are amply backed up by the 44 passes Blackwell has already caught as a Tiger. That leaves running with the football and nobody knows Blackwell's value there better than running backs coach Gary Campbell.

"Gary's got all the attributes you like to see in a runner at fullback," says Campbell. "He's got size, speed and he's smart.

"He's got that experience, reads blocks well and understands what we're trying to do offensively." Head coach Bob Toledo sums up the traits that have made Blackwell a three-year starter and the team's 1981 offensive MVP (along with Paul Schreiner).

"Blackwell's got to be one of the most valuable players on our football team—he does everything so well," says Toledo with admiration. "He's a leader, runner, pass blocker, can catch the ball and plays all out on special teams.

Coach Bob Toledo calls three-year starting fullback Gary Blackwell, "one of our most valuable players."

"But the biggest thing is that he's matured to the point where he knows the offense and doesn't make mistakes. He's a very consistent player."

Blackwell's maturing process and that of the Tiger program under Toledo (who made Blackwell a member of his first recruiting class) make for an interesting comparison. In 1979, with new coach and team still feeling each other out, Blackwell saw typically limited freshman playing time.

In 1980, as a sophomore, Blackwell was the starting fullback on a young club that won three of its first five. But then Blackwell was sidelined with a painful foot injury and the team went into a nosedive coinciding with his injury, losing six in a row and finishing 4-8.

Then last fall, after battling a murderous early season schedule, the increasingly experienced Tigers won three of their last four, including upset victories at South Carolina and Hawaii. The program is obviously one on the rise and after helping it through growing pains, the 21-year-old Blackwell is ready to go out in a blaze of glory and see the team to have a banner year.

"We've been hurt by injuries, schedule and inexperience the last three years but at the end of last season, after some of the newer guys got into the flow, things really started opening up," says the blonde fullback. "We have so much experience back that if everyone stays healthy, it could be a really great season." Personally, Blackwell would like to hit the 1,000-yd. plateau.

"That's my all-time goal but I guess that goes for almost any running back," smiled Blackwell. "More than that, though, I want to help carry and lead the team to its first PCAA championship and a bowl game (California Bowl, Dec. 18 in Fresno)." Anyone who's seen Blackwell in action knows he'll bear his share of the offensive burden.

One of UOP's tri-captains in 1982 (along with George Dunlap and Dan McGahan), he's gained 961 career yards (947 coming in the last two seasons), including a 113-yd. effort against Hawaii as a sophomore.

The possessor of 400 lb.-plus bench press strength, Blackwell hits into the middle of the line like a ground level missile but give him an inch of daylight and he'll show what separates him from other battering ram-type fullbacks.

When he gets an opening, Blackwell can cut it up as quickly as most tailbacks, using his 4.6 speed to turn a short gainer into six points. In the previously-mentioned Hawaii game, he did just that, romping 73 yards past some startled defensive backs for a touchdown.

Pass catching was a bit of a problem for Blackwell when he arrived at Pacific after an honor-studded, multi-sport career at John Glenn High School in Norwalk. Already a weight-lifting aficionado, he brought a muscular, bulky upper body with him but very little flexibility.

"You have to be able to turn quickly, be agile and have a lot of flexibility to be a receiver out of the backfield," explains Blackwell. "When I got here, I was put on a nautilus and stretching program that proportioned my body a lot more.

"This summer, I really worked hard on running (interval sprinting with distance work interspersed) and I think I'm in better shape and faster than I've ever been."

What more can a coach ask for in a fullback. A runner, a passer and a blocker—and still getting better.

THIS WEEK'S OPPONENT

UC Davis – Head Coach Jim Sochor

With his 12 consecutive winning seasons as head football coach at the University of California-Davis, Jim Sochor has distinguished himself as one of the most successful of all active grid coaches in Division II of the NCAA.

Sochor's career record of 91 victories, 28 losses, and 4 ties in UC Davis' non-scholarship program represents an outstanding winning percentage of .756. Included in his accomplishments as the Aggies' winningest coach are 11 straight Far Western Conference championships and a record league win streak of 38 games.

Five of his most outstanding players (Rolf Benirschke, Rich Martini, Mike Moroski, Casey Merrill and Jeff Allen) are on the rosters of National Football League teams.

In addition to being named Coach-of-the-Year many times in the Far Western Conference and for all of Northern California, Sochor has served on several committees of the American Football Coaches Association.

Sochor's 1977 team made history by going unbeaten and untied during the regular season, the only Davis squad to achieve the feat in 66 years. Selected as the first California school to appear in the NCAA Division II playoffs, the Aggies battled eventual national champion Lehigh University in a semi-final contest that was televised to 75% of the nation's population.

In his undergraduate days at San Francisco State University (1956-60), Sochor quarterbacked the Golden Gators to three consecutive conference titles. He earned All-Far Western Conference honors three times and reached his peak as a senior by gaining awards as Little All-American and Northern California Back-of-the-Year. He narrowly missed a berth in the East-West Shrine All-Star Game. Today, he reigns as the greatest percentage passer to play at his alma mater.

Jim Sochor

Sochor remained at the Bay Area school after graduation and served as a highly-regarded assistant coach in football and basketball. He acquired his master's degree in 1965, moved to the University of Utah for his doctoral certificate and joined the UC Davis staff in 1967 as an assistant football and baseball coach. In 1970, Sochor assumed command of the Aggies' football program.

Sochor and his wife, Donna, are parents of two teenage daughters.

UOP FOOTBALL HISTORY

UOP Football Hall of Fame

On June 22, 1982, 22 former University of the Pacific football players, coaches and supporters were the charter inductees into the UOP Football Hall of Fame.

The football hall is the initial portion of an overall University of the Pacific Athletic Hall of Fame and new members will be selected each year to join the 22 charter members.

According to the criteria established by the Hall of Fame Committee, a member must be a former Pacific player, coach or booster who has made outstanding contributions to the history of Pacific football.

The first choices were made from each of the following eras—1919-1937, 1938-1947, 1948-1957 and 1958-1967. No candidates were chosen from 1968 to present day but Tiger greats of that time period will become eligible as the years pass.

Current plans call for a special Hall of Fame room to be constructed in Pacific's main gymnasium building. This area would contain pictures, information and memorabilia on all members of the UOP Athletic Hall of Fame.

YOUR TIME HAS COME

PONTIAC TRANS AM

The excitement began 15 years ago when those electrifying "Birds" came down like rolling thunder to capture the hearts of enthusiasts everywhere. And a legend was born.

Now comes the road machine that will fire-up a new generation!

From saber-like nose to rakish tail, Trans Am is a brilliant orchestration of aerodynamic function. Its .31 drag coefficient is the best of any production car GM has ever tested.

But the new Trans Am is much more than a beautiful piece of automotive sculpture. It's a

THE DRIVER'S CAR

The makings of a legend:

- 5.0 liter 4-bbl. V-8 with dual free-flow resonator exhausts
- 4-speed manual transmission
- Quick-ratio power steering
- MacPherson front struts
- Front and rear stabilizer bars
- Torque arm rear suspension
- Turbo cast aluminum wheels
- P205/70R14 steel radials
- 14½" Formula steering wheel
- Reclining front bucket seats

driver's car that's totally engineered for serious roadwork.

Trans Am with options shown, $9,897. Trans Am's base price? Only $9,659! This is a manufacturer's suggested retail price including dealer prep. Taxes, license, destination charges and optional equipment additional.

One "hands-on" impression will convince you that Trans Am is a driving sensation!

The legend makers at Pontiac have done it again!

Some Pontiacs are equipped with engines produced by other GM divisions, subsidiaries, or affiliated companies worldwide. See your Pontiac dealer for details.

PARITY— THE RESULT OF THE 30-SCHOLARSHIP LIMIT

by Bob Hammel, The Bloomington
HERALD-TELEPHONE

When it was passed, the dollar pinch got credit. The NCAA's Bylaw 5-5 (c), the one that limits major colleges to a maximum of 30 new scholarships in a year and 95 working at any one time, was swept in at the NCAA's special economy convention in August, 1975.

Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke wasn't myopic. He was an ardent advocate of the limit for its parity potential, Duke arguing almost lyrically that college football had to face up to its main problem: polls and bowls dominated by the same few teams year in and year out. Bylaw 5-5 (c), Duke said then and still contends, was "the single-most important piece of legislation the NCAA has passed" in recent years.

The rule did save money. It took the college game from a point where there was no national limit through a temporary 120-man ceiling to the cutoff at 95. A few schools were operating in the no-limit days with scholarship totals near 150.

Last year, 1981, was a watershed year in college football history, many felt.

It was a year of unparalleled tumult at the top of the ratings. Seven different teams occupied No. 1, and the last to be there, Clemson, was an underdog to yet an eighth team, Nebraska, before defending its spot and winning the national championship by whipping the Cornhuskers in the Orange Bowl, 22-15. That was a watershed of its own—an Atlantic Coast Conference team over a Big Eight club for the national title. The "basketball league" scored a resounding breakthrough.

It was a season that began with Michigan No. 1, until the Wolverines lost their opener to Wisconsin. Notre Dame became No. 1, but lost to Michigan. Southern Cal inherited the top position and held it a couple of weeks before losing to Arizona. Texas had it when Oklahoma trampled the Longhorns, 42-11. Penn State took over, but Miami of Florida dumped the Nittany Lions. That's when it became Pitt's turn, and the Panthers made it unbeaten to their final game before being crushed on national TV by Penn State, 48-14. The teams anointed as the best in the land had a 7-6 year, on the Saturdays when they took that No. 1 tag into combat.

There were other examples of the new-found parity. Either Ohio State or Michigan had been the Big Ten's representative in the Rose Bowl for 13 straight years, but in 1981, Wisconsin became the first team in that era to whip both the Wolverines and Buckeyes in the same season, and Iowa, which defeated Michigan and Wisconsin and didn't play Ohio State, went to Pasadena.

The state schools in the Southwest Conference (Texas, Arkansas, Texas A&M and Texas Tech) had a losing record for the second straight year against the league's private schools (Southern Methodist, Baylor, Rice and Texas Christian).

Southern Cal and UCLA were bounced around in the Pac-10. Notre Dame finished 5-6.

The vote was in. Parity had arrived and "30-95" was responsible.

Bobby Collins built Southern Mississippi into a power in the years after the limits of 30 recruits and 95 total players went in. His team tied Alabama, 13-13, and swept into the Tangerine Bowl with a 9-1-1 record before being nudged there by Missouri, 19-17. Collins did a lot of coaching and a lot of recruiting to build that team, but he says frankly, "I don't think there's any doubt that the 30-95 rule had to play a major role in what we did at Southern Mississippi."

Collins took over there in 1975. "As we looked at the situation, there were Ole Miss and Mississippi State within the state, Auburn and Alabama in Alabama, LSU and Tulane in Louisiana—at one time, they could each sign 45 players. We felt the 30-man limit made available about 100 football players that in other years might have attended other schools.

"It gave us an opportunity to recruit better football players.

"Now, I really believe that the schools that are your perennial powers are still right there. I don't think there has been a big change in that. The shuffle has come in the 80 percent in the middle. There, some teams have been able to move up to the upper echelon."

Dave Montgomery has reached the same conclusion.

Montgomery has never coached nor recruited a player. He is a fan in Lincoln, Nebraska. His hobby is collecting, tabulating and studying college football polls.

Montgomery has a copy of every Associated Press poll since the ranking business began in 1936. He can tell you that the all-time Top 10, in rating points from 1936 through the one Jan. 2, 1982, that established Clemson as the national champion, are; 1. Notre Dame ("easily"); 2. Ohio State; 3. Oklahoma ("That's new—they just moved ahead of Michigan and Southern Cal last year"); 4. Southern Cal; 5. Michigan; 6. Texas; 7. Alabama; 8. Nebraska; 9. Penn State; 10. Tennessee.

Want to go deeper? 11. UCLA; 12. Michigan State; 13. Arkansas.

"You could almost sit down today and call out 20 football teams and they're gonna be there in the polls next year," Collins said. "I think people are nibbling at those powers, and possibly one or two of them might have a poor recruiting year and get knocked out for a couple of years. But they're still the ones who are going to be there. This has been proven over the years."

Montgomery concludes, "The major effect (of the 30-95 rule) has been to create a prosperous middle class. It seems to have lowered the gap. It hasn't really brought down the top teams and it definitely didn't help the doormats, but it seems to have made the middle group more competitive."

"As I read the poll results, the rule seems to have helped basically three groups: the strong teams in what had been considered weak conferences, Clemson and Brigham Young, for example; the good independents—not Notre Dame and Penn State, but teams like Pitt and Florida State and Southern Mississippi; and the middle group in the major conferences—teams like Washington, Wisconsin, SMU."

But parity? Montgomery's poll readings come up with surprising figures.

In the eight years before there were any limits (1966-73), "an average of 34 teams a year made the Top 20," Montgomery said. In 1978 through '81, after the legislation had had time to move its recruiting classes along, guess how many teams tasted Top 20 glory: 35 a year? 40?

"32," Montgomery said, "down 2 from before the rule."

And in 1981, the year of tumult?

"31."

"I did notice one thing," he added. "From 1966 to '73, the big five conferences—the Big Ten, Pac-10, Big Eight, SEC and Southwest—received 78.4 percent of all the poll points. In the next eight years, from 1974 to '81, even though they had added Houston and Arizona State, those five conferences got just over 70 percent of the poll points. The five conferences seem to be losing hold."

Against Collins' conviction that the powers "are still going to be there" and Montgomery's poll readings that led him to conclude, "It (30-95) hasn't really brought down the top teams," there is one leftover fact from 1981.

The Top 10 at the end of the year included only three teams from Montgomery's all-time Top 10—Texas (No. 2 to Clemson), Penn State (No. 3) and Alabama (No. 7).

None of the all-time Top Five—Notre Dame, Ohio State, Oklahoma, Southern Cal and Michigan—finished in 1981's Top 10.

In 1975, when the parity legislation was enacted, eight teams from the all-time list, the "perennials" in Collins' term, finished in the Top 10. The other two who crowded in that year were hardly outsiders: UCLA, No. 11 on Montgomery's all-time list, and Arkansas, No. 13.

In case you buy the oft-stated claim that things never change among college football's elite, consider that the first year's poll (1936) wound up with Minnesota 1, followed by: 2. LSU; 3. Pittsburgh; 4. Alabama; 5. Washington; 6. Santa Clara; 7. Northwestern; 8. Notre Dame; 9. Nebraska; 10. Penn.

Consider, too, that Montgomery's all-time Top 20 is rounded out by: 14. LSU; 15. Georgia Tech; 16. Mississippi; 17. Army; 18. Georgia; 19. Pitt; 20. Auburn.

Army hasn't made a Top 20 list since 1962. Georgia Tech slipped into 20th for one week in the seasons of 1972 and '78 but hasn't had a solid hold on a poll spot since 1970. Mississippi hasn't cracked the ranking since 1976.

Things do change, but not radically.

Unless you would consider a season when seven different teams are No. 1, and none of the all-time Top Five finishes in the Top 10, and all-time leader Notre Dame goes 5-6, a radical change.

Collins—now coaching at SMU—and Montgomery, among others, are waiting for just a little more evidence.

The legend of The Pendleton Shirt.

It all began in the Pacific Northwest. At the turn of the century, a pioneer family began weaving blankets, robes and shawls of exceptional quality in Pendleton, Oregon. Many designs were inspired by the motifs of the nearby Nez Perce Indian Nation.

It was an ideal place for such a beginning. Rich grasslands nurtured bands of sheep that grew wool of the highest quality. Soft, pure water was abundant for scouring and dyeing. And the family brought to the task a heritage of weaving which began generations before in England.

Through the years, Pendleton blankets and robes came to be considered a standard of value among settlers and Indians throughout the West.

And so the legend of excellence began.

The family then applied its skills to the creation of 100% virgin wool clothing fabrics. Fine, beautiful fabrics which were then tailored into shirts that loggers, ranchers and sportsmen of the region could wear a lifetime.

Each shirt was "warranted to be a Pendleton," to assure the buyer that the company stood behind its products, in quality and workmanship.

And the legend grew.

Today, four generations later, the family is still making shirts warranted to be Pendletons, to the same standards our forefathers set those many years ago.

We continue to use only pure, virgin wools, selected and graded by hand each shearing season.

We design the patterns, dye the wool, spin the yarn, weave the fabrics.

And then, in over 60 careful steps, these pure virgin wool fabrics are cut and sewn into Pendleton Shirts.

It is this commitment to quality and value in 100% virgin wool, this attention to detail every step, every stitch of the way, that makes a Pendleton Shirt different from every shirt in the world.

It is the commitment we have always made to a Pendleton Shirt. And always will.

The legend deserves no less.

DO TWO BLADES REALLY SHAVE CLOSER THAN ONE?

BIC SHOWS THAT ITS ONE BLADE
SHAVES JUST AS CLOSE AS TRAC II,
BUT FOR A LOT LESS MONEY!

We asked men to shave one side of their face with Trac II* and the other side with BIC. The next day, they reversed razors.

Each day, we measured whiskers with an electron microscope. Minutes after shaving, we saw no difference. Even eight hours later, no difference. But the price? Big difference. One Trac II cartridge costs 51¢ while one complete BIC Shaver costs 28¢. That's a 23¢ difference!*

So why pay for a second blade you don't need, when the one BIC blade shaves you just as close...shave after shave after shave...for less.

Beyond quartz, the world's most precise tuning system, lies the extraordinary ability to expand sound.

Imagine you're in a room with Technics SA-828 receiver. What you hear is beautiful stereo. Then you activate Technics variable Dimension Control. Incredibly, the sound begins to move. The stereo image widens to the point where the music begins to surround you. You're intrigued by its richness and depth. You're enveloped by a new experience in sound. That's the wonder of the patented technology in Technics Dimension Control.

Just as wondrous is quartz synthesis, the world's most precise tuning system. That's how the SA-828 quartz synthesizer eliminates FM drift as well as the hassle of tuning. You can even preset and instantly retrieve 7 FM and 7 AM stations, all perfectly in tune.

Another perfect example of Technics technology is our synchro-bias circuitry. What it does is constantly send minute amounts of power to the amplifier transistors. And since they can't switch on or off, switching distortion is eliminated.

And when it comes to power, the SA-828 has plenty: 100 watts per channel minimum RMS into 8 ohms from 20Hz to 20kHz with no more than 0.005% total harmonic distortion.

The SA-828 goes on to show its sophistication with a super-quiet phono equalizer, soft touch program selectors, fully electronic volume control, and a Dimension Control display that doubles as a power level meter.

Technics SA-828 is part of a full line of quartz synthesized receivers. Hear it for yourself. Beyond its quartz synthesizer lies a new dimension in sound.

BALL CONTROL Run or Pass?

by Clyde Bolton, The Birmingham NEWS

Basketball coaches have got it made," the burly fellow said, tapping the sports page of his folded newspaper with his knuckles. "They get a few points ahead near the end of the game and they deny the other team the chance to catch up. They hold the ball, and the other team tries to get it and fouls and gets deeper in the hole.

"Boy, I'd love to have that luxury—score a touchdown and deflate the ball and toss it in the canvas bag."

BALL CONTROL

continued

The dreamer was a football coach at a southern university. He'll have to keep on dreaming because ball control in his sport doesn't exclude the other team to the extent it does in basketball. It exists and it's acceptable—even exciting—strategy, but it's more difficult than in roundball.

Ball control football—accomplished through running and/or passing—is a game within a game.

Let's explore it, shall we?

"I think fans will see more and more teams using the pass to control the ball. Linemen can protect the passer better now.

"I noticed a difference last season because of the new blocking rule about using the hands," a southwestern coach said. "It has made a drastic change in lots of coaches' thinking where throwing the football is concerned.

"In pass protection, it used to be that an offensive lineman could not extend his hands from his jersey. Now he can block with the palms of his hands open. When the rule came about, and I believe that as long as it stays in, it will encourage teams to use the pass in ball control.

"One coach, a friend of mine, said he had a quarterback who regards ball control passing like a checker game. He'd much rather throw those little spot passes that frustrate the defensive backs than to rear back and hunk one 50 yards to some guy running wide open. He said his quarterback's eyes lit up like Christmas ornaments when he told him about the rule."

"I don't think you can rely just on the pass or just on the run when you're playing ball control," a midwestern coach said. "You'd better have more than one weapon in your arsenal. In fact, the other team needs to know you have the ability to uncork a long one, too, or they'll be sitting in your lap.

"There's a lot of emphasis in football on the short and medium pass that's thrown in front of the defense. But, the team that has speed and can go for the long one will keep the defense honest."

Ball control running will be more difficult to defend against than ball control passing—over the long haul.

"Passing hinges more on the quarterback having an on day or an off day," an East Coast coach explained. "If he's hot, it's tough to defend against. If he's not, if he's off a foot or so it isn't. A running attack will be more consistent game in and game out."

"My ideal team would be one with a good ball control offense, a strong defense and a sound kicking game," said a small college coach from the Far West. "Defense and kicking go hand in hand with the ball control philosophy.

"The theory, of course, is to keep the ball away from the opponent's offense and to wear down its defense. Then, when they do get the ball, the psychological and physical blow is completed if they can't score against your defense."

Ball control can give a team a great psychological edge.

"If you drive a ball on a team 80 yards early in the game it deflates their confidence," said one coach.

"It's pretty disheartening for your opponent if you take the ball and run it right down on them. They're standing there looking at each other and shaking their heads, discouraged that they've tried a lot of different things and none of them have worked.

"The same thing holds true at the start of the second half. You drive it 80

FOR CENTURIES, GEESE HAVE KEPT WARM THE SAME OLD WAY.

Feathers, feathers and more feathers. Fine, in their time. But now man has created something better. Thinsulate Thermal Insulation from 3M. A goose would be silly not to give it a try.

WE USE FIBERS, NOT FEATHERS.

Our special microfibers trap more air than most other insulations do. And that's the key to our amazing warmth. You see, the more air an insulator traps the better it works. True. And that means a half inch of Thinsulate Insulation is actually 1.8 times warmer than a half inch of down. Nearly twice as warm. In Thinsulate Insulation, a goose might not mind staying north all winter.

This much Thinsulate Insulation is as warm as ..... this much down.

IT'S EASIER TO FLAP YOUR WINGS IN THINSULATE INSULATION.

Because it takes less of our insulation to keep you warm, you get a sleek, lean, racy look. Not bulky. In Thinsulate Insulation, you can lead an active outdoor life. Freedom of movement from wingtip to wingtip.

OUR INSULATION ISN'T AFRAID TO GO NEAR THE WATER.

Should you happen to get it wet, don't worry. Unlike down, Thinsulate Insulation retains almost all of its insulating value under damp conditions. And it can even be machine washed or dry cleaned, depending on the garment's care instructions.

WHAT'S GOOD FOR THE GOOSE IS JUST AS GOOD FOR YOU.

The U.S. Navy Divers, the 1981 British Winter Expedition on Everest, and hard-working ski patrollers and instructors around the world use Thinsulate Insulation. Because it works for them. yards, then the other team has to be wondering if you're in better condition to play the second 30 minutes.

"A long drive takes more out of the team on defense than a long touchdown pass does. They can justify one breakdown, but it's hard to rationalize a long drive.

"We played one team, and they kicked off and we drove it 90 yards for a touchdown. When you watched the two teams leave the field there was no doubt who had the upper hand. But, they ran the kickoff back for a touchdown, and the momentum switched, and we ended up losing that game. So you need to follow a long drive with good 'D'."

"A long drive that doesn't score isn't all negative. You've worn the defense down, and the players know you can move the ball against them. But I do hate to see a drive end in a successful goal line stand because that tends to fire the other team up, to switch the momentum."

The best type pass for ball control?

"You try to manipulate the underneath coverage so that you're matching a back against a linebacker or a back against an end. You want to match a real fast athlete against one who is not quite so agile," a southern coach said. "In ball control you go for high percentage passes rather than the deep outs or the deep circles where there are accuracy problems.

"A pass I like is the low pass thrown in front of the receiver. Sometimes it's thrown so low the guy goes to his knees to catch it. We don't intend that, but sometimes it happens.

"The ball is thrown to a target and the receiver has to come back to it. He may even have to drop down to catch it. The receiver wants to keep the defender behind him. If he has two yards between himself and the defender and comes back and has to wait for the ball, the defender recovers while the ball is in the air. But, if the ball is thrown to the target at the right instant, the receiver will beat the defender by two yards. The ball is thrown to a spot, not to the receiver. That's the way you coach the out-cuts.

"One good thing about those passes is that they occasionally go for surprise touchdowns. We sent a guy down on what was supposed to be an eight-yard out. The defender gambled and played across in front of him but didn't break it up. They were in man coverage, and there was nobody to back him up, and we scored from 40 yards."

What does a coach look for in a ball control runner?

"I like a big, powerful type, but also one who has running knack and a sense of making the right move, rather than some big old guy who just runs up in there for a two-yard or three-yard gain," one southern coach said. "If you got the guy who can make the move, he may turn it into a four-yard gain.

The ideal pass for ball control is one thrown in front of the receiver.

"Add it up: I know the saying is, 'three yards and a cloud of dust,' but in three downs you've only got nine yards, and you've got to punt.

"Some backs have the knack to get that little extra that can be so important, and others don't. You want a good body—lean and good sized—and strength, of course, but you also want a smart runner.

"A lot of times you can shut down the big old guy, but the player with that extra knack will turn the run into a couple more yards with the right move at the right time—and if he can turn it into a couple more yards he can occasionally turn it into 50 more yards."

You've always heard that third down is the crucial snap.

"First down is just as important as third," the Eastern coach said. "If you don't put the defense in an awkward situation with the first down play, they have leverage on you. If you gain a yard they can play you a little different than if you come up with a second and five. Then you have the advantage because you can run more conservative plays and don't have to go for the gainer." ●

Mazda wins again.

After winning the IMSA GTU Manufacturers' Championship in 1980, the Mazda RX-7 did it again in 1981. We think this is a notable achievement, especially when you consider that the RX-7 didn't compete in IMSA racing until 1979, when it was merely the runner-up.

It was also a winning year for RX-7 drivers Lee Mueller and Walt Bohren, who finished at the top of the GTU pointstandings.

Meanwhile, the street version of the RX-7 continues to win acclaim as today's most incredible sports car value.

1981 IMSA GTU
Champion

For example, in August 1981, Road & Track magazine selected the RX-7 as one of the 10 Best Cars For the Eighties. Here's part of what they had to say:

"In the class for Closed Sports Car, the Mazda RX-7 won on a unanimous vote... Its performance is excellent with smooth acceleration from the rotary engine, its handling and braking are hard to fault, it's comfortable on long trips... and the price is surprisingly low."

Look for the RX-7 race car during the 1982 IMSA season. And look for the 1982 RX-7 sports car now at your nearest Mazda dealer. You'll find that the Mazda RX-7 is a winner—any way you look at it.

The nose of the football is only inches away from the goal line. The offensive team stands about 10 yards upfield, huddling around its quarterback. The defensive team huddles in its own end zone, under the shadow of the goal posts.

The crowd is on its feet, screaming in anticipation of the next play, though not everyone is thinking along the same lines. The fans of the offensive team are looking for a touchdown. The fans of the defensive team are chanting along with the school's cheerleaders—"Hold that line"—as the school band chimes in with a few well timed notes.

The teams break the huddles and saunter up to the line of scrimmage. Two masses of humanity line up against each other, close to 1,700 pounds of hulking manhood on each side of the line.

THE GOAL LINE STAND

It's the most dramatic form of confrontation in a sport of repeated confrontations. It's the goal line stand.

Touchdown bombs are a great psychological lift for any college football team, and long punt returns and runs from scrimmage for touchdowns also provide huge boosts for the team that scores. But nothing compares with the emotional high a team feels when it rises up like some kind of solid, impenetrable wall and turns back the opposition in what seems like a sure scoring bid.

"A successful goal line stand by the defense contributes to a greater swing in momentum than any other thing that happens on a football field," said the head coach of an eastern football team.

"The team that stops the offense feels great, and the team that doesn't score suffers a big letdown," he added.

The strategy behind the goal line stand is simple—stop the other team from scoring. Or at least hold the opposition to a field goal.

Carrying out the battle plan is less simple, but there really aren't a whole lot of different alignments used to stop the enemy.

Most teams, no matter what basic defense they use, whether it is the three-man front or a four-man front, use a 6-5 defense for their goal line defense. What that means is that the defense will use six "down" linemen (linemen who start from a three-point or four-point stance before the snap of the ball), and generally two linebackers and three defensive backs in their attempt to thwart the opposition.

The defensive coaches get to that 6-5 alignment in many different ways. In some cases, if a team uses a basic 4-3 defense—that is, four down linemen and three linebackers, along with four men in the secondary—the coach generally pulls out two linebackers and one defensive back and replaces them with two good-sized defensive linemen off his bench.

In other cases, if a team uses the 3-4, it could be the coach will pull two linebackers and a defensive back for three additional linemen in getting to the 6-5. Or, if a coach has a linebacker who is as adept a defender from the "down" position as he is as a linebacker, a player who is "up" when the ball is snapped, he'll simply slip him into the front wall of the 6-5.

There are, of course, variations in the goal line defense. Some teams opt for seven-man or eight-man fronts, especially if the opposing team has a habit of trying to punch the fullback up the middle in such circumstances.

Then there are other, more radical goal line defenses, such as the one that might be called the Kamikaze Approach.

Players line up in what looks like a 6-5 formation, but they'll have their "up" defenders rushing up to the line of scrimmage before the snap of the ball, looking as if they're going to fill in the gaps between their "down" linemen and promising a blitz.

The ball gets snapped—and they blitz. Everyone. All 11 players rush. "Many schools use it, but it's a gamble. All of goal line defense is a gamble, though," said the defensive coordinator of an eastern college. "If the quarterback spots it coming, and can get off a pass, just throw the ball in the air, it's an easy touchdown, and everyone wonders why it doesn't happen that easily all the time.

"But if they get to him, it's a substantial loss of yardage, and can really hurt the offensive team," he added.

The generally accepted style is to play, in effect, a man-to-man defense in a goal line situation.

The down linemen are lined up either directly opposite an enemy lineman, or in a gap between enemy linemen. In any event, the defensive lineman's responsibility is to plug up the hole directly in front of him, according to one coach, and fill some space in front of the end zone.

The linebackers and defensive backs, meanwhile, are each responsible for an offensive player. Some teams may use a zone type of coverage, with each of the defenders responsible for a certain area, or zone, of the field, rather than an individual, but this is more an exception than the norm.

How a team lines up in its goal line defense depends partially on the opposition.

If the opposition is known to favor sending the fullback up the middle more often than not in such situations, the defense will tend to pack the middle with bulky linemen. If, on the other hand, a team is known to throw the ball in its goal line offense, the defensive team might have to keep four men in the secondary to counteract that tendency.

It is more difficult to pass from, say, inside the five-yard line, however, because the back of the end zone is pretty close to the line of scrimmage, meaning the receivers don't really have very far to run, and the defensive backs don't really have a lot of territory to cover.

Whatever the formation a team uses, it is a critical part of any team's game plan, and that means a lot of time in practice is spent on honing the goal line defense.

"I have calculated that a goal line defense situation comes up anywhere from 40-75 times a year in a 10-game schedule," said the head coach of a Division 1-AA team that made the playoffs last season.

"It works out to something like five out of every 80 plays. We practice five days a week, three of them hard work. In those three hard work days, we'll devote a full 30 minutes each day for just going over the goal line defense," he added.

Calling it the "goal line" defense actually may be a misnomer in some ways because it isn't used just when the nose of the football is poised inches away from the chalk line that the offense has to cross in order to rack up six points.

Exactly when the defense goes into its specialty defense depends on the down-and-distance situation. For instance, when faced with a first-and-goal situation from the eight-yard line, a defensive coach may not elect to go into his goal line defense. Many times, defenses will wait until the offense has crossed the five-yard line, but there are really no hard and fast rules.

For another example, if the enemy has a fourth-and-goal from the four, and the offense decides to go for the touch-down, the defense is not likely to remain in its goal line defense, because, generally, the goal line defense is designed to stop the battering-ram, fullback-plunge approach employed by most offenses in such short-yardage situations. In a fourth-and-goal from the four, the defensive team likely will go with one of its more standard defenses, geared to be equally effective against the pass as it is against the run.

And then there are the fourth-and-inches situations that crop up on other parts of the field during the course of a game. Several factors—score in the game, time left in the game, the momentum factor, for instance—will determine whether a coach will bring in his goal line defense on a fourth-and-inches from, say, the defensive team's 35-yard line.

"It's a high risk defense so we don't use it too often unless it's down near the goal line," said a defensive coordinator. "If the guy blows by you on a rush at the line of scrimmage, he's gone for a long TD run."

But when it's backs-to-the-wall time, with the enemy poised on your two-yard line, it's time to pull out all the stops. It's time for the goal line defense.

That's when the drama begins. And all of the pressure, believe it or not, is not on the defense. While the defense feels the pressure of having to stop the enemy, the offense knows that no matter how easy it was to move the ball down to the goal line area, that part of the drive doesn't mean a thing unless the team gets into the end zone. And from a first-and-goal from inside the five, the offensive team isn't generally satisfied with a field goal, either.

Because of that thinking, many coaches, urged on by their screaming fans, will tend to go for touchdowns on, say, fourth-and-goal from the two rather than try for a three-pointer. And that thinking, say some coaches, plays right into the defense's hands.

"I think the offenses do us a favor when they go for it in those cases," said a defensive coach at a Division 1 school.

"If they were to kick, that's like an extra point, which is easy for most kickers. And," he added, a gleam in his eye, "if they don't make it, well, they've turned the game around in our favor."

1981 ACADEMIC ALL-AMERICAS

University Division

Each year the College Sports Information Directors of America (CoSIDA) choose two 25-man squads—one from the University Division and one from the College Division—as Academic All-America football players. To be eligible for the teams a player must have at least a 3.0 grade point average and must perform regularly on his school's team.

The 1981 University Division team averaged a GPA of 3.55. Twelve of the players competed in post-season bowl games and at least five others participated in all-star games.

The College Division squad had an average GPA of 3.705. The fields of study in which high marks were achieved included pre-medical, biology, physics, business and engineering.

Dan Plater Brigham Young University

"I've been fortunate this past season in receiving a number of honors (such as MVP in the East-West Shrine Game), but none has meant more to me than being named first team Academic All-America. I've been fortunate, too, in that I've been able to attend school, get my degree and play football."

Rob Fada University of Pittsburgh

"I feel very honored, happy and pleased to be an Academic All-America pick. It's not easy excelling in both the classroom and on the field, but when you do, you get a huge amount of satisfaction—in fact, more satisfaction than just doing one well. It's gratifying to know that your hard work both on and off the field doesn't go unnoticed."

Darrin Nelson Stanford University

"The award itself is an honor, but the fact that I graduated from an institution like Stanford University while playing two sports (football and track) is the biggest accomplishment of my life so far, and one that I'll always remember."

Tim Ford Western Kentucky University

"I was really happy when I heard about it (the award). I feel it means much more to me than any of my previous awards. (It's great) to be recognized for more than just what you do on the field. Certainly it's the most prestigious award I've ever received."

FAIR CATCH

Right now, the Army National Guard is looking for men and women who want to be officers.

It's a tough, challenging job. One of the most important jobs in America. And you'll find the rewards match the challenge.

For instance, in the Army Guard, you'll gain valuable management and leadership skills you may use in your civilian career. You'll earn an excellent part-time income and be entitled to free air travel, PX privileges, life insurance, a fully paid retirement plan, and lots more.

You'll be serving close to home, helping people in your community and state when natural disasters or other emergencies arise. And, after your initial training, it takes just two days a month and two weeks annual training each year to serve, so you'll have plenty of time for your family, friends, school or job.

If you have previous experience as an Army officer, you can probably join the Army Guard as an officer. If not, and you qualify, you can get a commission through the Officer Candidate Programs, or a direct commission based on your unique civilian job experience.

To get the total picture on opportunities for officers in the Army National Guard, contact your local Army Guard recruiter, or call toll-free 800-638-7600.*

And so it is with one of the most specialized performers in college football: the punt returner. It is not enough that he be fleet of foot and blessed with the hands of a neurosurgeon. The punt returner must also know his position.

Know a position? A simple matter for a guy whose only job is to catch the football and run like heck, you might say. But anyone who has ever nervously eyed the fluttering ball as 11 bad guys came barreling down the field knows differently.

Judgment. The experienced hands tell you that is what great punt returning is all about. Knowing when you should settle under the descending projectile and when you should defer to the other deep back. Understanding that sometimes it's best to juke toward the sidelines and that other times the best route to the goal line is right between the hash marks.

And then there is that most crucial of all judgments—the fair catch.

The rule itself is uncommonly simple. It states only that the kick coverage team must keep hands off the punt returner if said return man frantically waves a hand over his head. The return man must signal for a fair catch before would-be tacklers come within five yards of him and he may not advance the football once he catches it, but that is a small price to pay for the protection.

Sometimes calling for a fair catch is as obvious as calling Christmas the day after December 24. Maybe the punter catches the ball just below his ankle bone and sends it a mile into the air. With potential tacklers awaiting the kill a millisecond after the ball drops into the returner's hands, fair catch is the prudent call.

Or maybe your team leads by a touchdown with a couple of minutes left in the game and you are straddling your 10-yard line, awaiting a very important punt. Only a showoff or a phys. ed. major would consider returning a punt in this situation. Why risk a possible fumble when you just as easily can give the fair catch sign and trim the chance for a potentially fatal turnover to nothing?

"It is prudent to fair catch, I think," said a prominent punt returner at a Division I school, "when you feel that even if you catch the ball you cannot be a threat to score or get better field position for your team."

"But that isn't the whole story. Every time I'm out there trying to decide whether I should stick up my hand (to signal for a fair catch), I'm taking into consideration a lot of other factors. Field position is important. So is what your coaches have told you. They always have opinions about the flow of the game, how fast the other (coverage) team is coming down and what their kicker is doing. If we're up against a punter who's kicking the ball high, more often than not, our coaches are just going to tell us to fair catch. At certain times in the game, Coach will tell us when we're on the sidelines."

But more often than not, the judgments are not nearly as cut and dried. Decisions are made quickly, sometimes hastily. The guys who immerse themselves in their work, the ones who study the punter and the kick coverage, who notice wind currents and field conditions, are best at minimizing the bad call. But even a leading punt returner at a school which finished among the nation's top 10 last year confesses, "If I'm being honest, I've got to say I make the wrong choice (return vs. fair catch) 30 percent of the time." He adds, "Sure it bothers you, but if you work on it as much as I do and you're prepared when you go out on the field, you've got to accept mistakes. You'd go crazy if you didn't."

Fortunately for the frazzled punt returner, not all the burden of a rotten

With every punt, the return men must exercise judgment on a myriad of details.

THINKING MAN'S GAME.

Make no mistake about it. Brains carry as much weight on the field as brawn these days. And during this year's Fireman's Fund Flashbacks on ABC-TV, you'll see the greatest flashes of brilliance in NCAA football. Double options. Instant audibles. Surprise blitzes.

These flashbacks are presented by Fireman's Fund on behalf of your local independent insurance agents. The independent men and women who put a lot of thought into getting you the best insurance for your needs. They're tough and they're smart. And they carry a lot of weight with decision is his. In many programs, punt returning is the job of two players. They drop back to field the booted ball. They set up shop on opposite sides of the field. And when the ball leaves the punter's foot, they coach one another on the whys and wherefores of the return.

At many schools one of the deep backs is designated as the man who makes the decisions. He decides who will field the punt. When the ball is in the air, he briefs his partner on where the coverage team is and how rapidly they are closing in.

With two backs deep, the player who isn't catching even can instruct his neighbor whether to settle for the fair catch or go for a return.

"I'm lucky in that we get to work on punt returns a lot in practice and I've gotten to know and trust my partner," said a return man who plays the role of dutiful subject to the dictatorial power of his punt-returning partner. "Having played the game for a long time, you develop a sense about where people are on the field and how close they are to hitting you. But it's nice to have that other set of eyes back there with you."

"On our team, the other guy makes the call. If he says he has it, I let him have it. If he says it's mine, I take it. If he tells me to fair catch, I do it, even if I think it might not be the right call."

"I'm fortunate. I like the guy. I have confidence in him, and that's important. Let's face it, every time we drop back, we're in a situation where somebody could rip our heads off. Anybody who tells you he doesn't feel that way is crazy. It's so important to know this (return) man, to feel confident in his judgment."

Sometimes even complete trust in your neighbor and enough judgment to make a Supreme Court justice envious is not enough. Sometimes the fair catch fails because the punt returner forgot the rules.

Case-in-point: a return man sights the ball as it leaves the punter's foot. He studies it, considers the hodgepodge of variables that shape a return man's decision and decides to call for a fair catch.

"Ah yes," he thinks to himself, "I raise my hand and the coverage team cannot put a glove on me."

Wrong.

"Just because you raise your hand does not mean a fair catch," says the veteran return man. "You have to wave your hand. And I mean wave it. Believe me, I've been over this many times."

"It may seem like a minor point, but when you consider that one dumb play can cost you a game, it really isn't. Every year we have a rules man, an official, come into fall camp. He goes over all sorts of rules and then we have written tests that are graded, marked, the whole thing."

Once he has settled all the issues concerning judgment, rules interpretation and the rest, it really gets tough for the punt returner. That's when he has to deal with those 80,000 sets of eyes, some adoring, others scornful, all of them focused on the playing field.

If the return man hurdles a moat, bounces off a brick wall and falls forward for 15 yards, the demanding fan wants to know why it isn't 20. If he jukes inside, dances outside and takes it in for the score, the fan in the stands expects him to bounce back onto the field to kick the point-after.

And if the return man dares to hoist his hand and give the fair catch signal, the indignant fan cannot help but suspect that this fellow on the field lacks courage or brains, or both.

An amused punt returner replies: "The people who say that don't understand the game. If you're playing this caliber of football, believe me, you may have fears, but you're not a chicken. If you think about it, it's a ridiculous statement to make."

But in a private moment, even its staunchest opponent will confess that yes, the fair catch is a necessary part of punt returning and yes, there'd be a lot of fractured sternums without it.

But geez, it's more fun to run them back.

"I guess the one thing a punt returner doesn't want," said a punt returner, "is to go through a whole game, get a lot of punts and fair catch every one."

At many schools one of the return men is the decision maker; it is he who decides whether to fair catch the ball.

THIS IS PACIFIC

The Best of Both Worlds

Founded in 1851 as California's first chartered university, University of the Pacific has developed a reputation as one of the finest academic institutions in the West.

The only private school in the Pacific Coast Athletic Association, Pacific offers a diversity of programs that would normally be associated with a much larger university than the 6,000 students currently attending classes at the main campus in Stockton, Sacramento and San Francisco.

Pacific is now comprised of 10 schools and colleges, including a dental school in San Francisco and McGeorge School of Law in Sacramento. On the main campus in Stockton are two liberal arts colleges and schools of music, engineering, education, pharmacy, business and public administration and a graduate school.

The liberal arts colleges include College of the Pacific, the largest arts and sciences college with more than 50 major programs and Elbert Covell College, the only Spanish-speaking college in the United States.

Throughout Pacific, the emphasis is on teaching, although research is recognized as having a need in the various disciplines.

The students at the university are represented on nearly all policy-making committees and the Associated Students play an active role in campus life through social and cultural programs for the community. The Stockton metropolitan area, with a population of more than 200,000 is also the scene of many programs that take the students off campus in a multitude of community involvement and work experience activities.

The university athletic program has excelled in conjunction with its proud academic heritage. Such names as Amos Alonzo Stagg, Eddie LeBaron, Dick Bass, Tom Flores, John Gianelli and Ron Cornelius have graced the UOP athletic fields and courts.

In 1981, Pacific dedicated the 6,000-seat Alex G. Spanos Center. This on-campus facility, named for UOP regent and benefactor Alex G. Spanos, serves as home for several Tiger athletic teams as well as other university and community functions.

The University has been directed by President Stanley E. McCaffrey since October of 1971. McCaffrey recently returned from a one-year leave of absence as President of Rotary International, a duty which saw him travel to all corners of the world.

Stockton, renowned for its inland, deep water port, is located in the Central Valley of California, 75 miles east of San Francisco and 50 miles south of Sacramento. It is within easy driving distance of Lake Tahoe, the scenic national parks of the Sierra Nevada, the picturesque wine country of Napa and Sonoma Valleys and the Bay Area.

Athletic Director

Since taking over as UOP athletic director in July of 1979, Elkin "Ike" Isaac has set the Tiger athletic department on a course that is sound competitively and financially.

Isaac's three years guiding the UOP program have seen an upgrading of the football program, the opening of the 6,000-seat Spanos Center on campus, the rise to national prominence of the women's volleyball team and the vast improvement of the entire women's program. In 1982, UOP will host the NCAA Volleyball Finals.

Isaac, 59, a professor of kinesiology and trainer at UOP for four years before becoming first interim and then full-time athletic director, is not new to his current position.

He served in a similar post at Albion (Michigan) College for 15 years (1959-74). Before stepping up as Albion's athletic director, Isaac was the school's head basketball, track and cross country coach for seven seasons (1953-59), winning one league basketball championship, seven track titles and four cross country crowns.

Isaac received a B.A. from Albion in 1948 and earned his masters there in 1950. He is married (wife Edith), has a son (Ron) and a daughter (Sue).

A Growing Force in Division 1-A

One of the country's up-and-coming conferences, the Pacific Coast Athletic Association had a truly banner year in 1981-82. Its two biggest steps forward came with the addition of Nevada-Las Vegas as a full-fledged member in November and the playing of the first California Bowl, showcasing the champions of the PCAA and Mid-American Conferences, in Fresno, in December.

Classified as NCAA Division 1-A in all sports, the PCAA has flourished under the active and dynamic leadership of former Commissioner Jesse T. Hill and his successor Lewis A. Cryer, who begins his fifth year at the league's helm.

A desire to form a Division 1-A football conference was the spark that led to the formation of the PCAA on July 1, 1969. The 14-year-old conference now consists of nine members (seven play football) of which five — Pacific, Long Beach State, San Jose State, Fresno State and UC Santa Barbara — are charter members.

Cal State Fullerton joined the conference in the summer of 1974, followed by UC Irvine in July of 1977. When Utah State was admitted in October, 1977, the PCAA was transformed into a regional conference and becomes even more so with the addition of UNLV.

Known as one of the most innovative conferences in collegiate athletics, the PCAA was the first league on the West Coast to use a post-season tournament as a means of selecting its NCAA Tournament representative. The 1982 tournament, played at the Anaheim Convention Center had sellout crowds for the semi-final and final games. It will be played at the Los Angeles Forum in 1983.

Dr. Allen Agnew, Athletic Representative from Fresno State, is the conference president, while Norman Jones of Utah State serves as vice president. Jack Roberts is the PCAA's supervisor of football officials.

The California Bowl

In 1981, the California Bowl quickly established a tradition of excitement as Mid-American Conference champion Toledo, behind quarterback Maurice Hall (the offensive player of the game) and linebacker Marlon Russell (the defensive player of the game), came from behind in the last 15 seconds to upend PCAA champion San Jose State, 27-25.

California Bowl II, again to be held at the 30,000-seat Fresno State Stadium, is slated for Saturday, December 18 and will again pit the regular season winners of the Mid-American Conference and the PCAA. Tentative kick-off is at 1:00 p.m.

The contest, one of 17 post-season bowl games sanctioned by the NCAA and one of just two to be close-ended (the Rose Bowl is the other), will be televised by the Mizlou Television Network out of New York for the second consecutive year and will also be shown on ESPN. It will also be broadcast by two radio networks, one in English and one in Spanish.

The two-year-old Fresno facility that serves as home for the California Bowl was funded by community donations and features natural turf, a computer-operated scoreboard and a field 37 feet below ground level, insuring a good view from all seats.

THE STADIUM

Pacific Memorial Stadium, a 30,163-seat, earth-fill structure was dedicated on October 21, 1950 when the Pacific football team entertained Loyola. Built on land donated in part by the legendary Amos Alonzo Stagg, it is one of the largest on-campus facilities in the PCAA. It was funded in main by a two-month drive in the spring of 1950 which raised $165,000. Initially having a capacity of 35,975 with room for expansion to over 44,000, the stadium has undergone several structural changes that have reduced the seating to its current level.

TICKET OFFICES

The Tiger Ticket Office in the athletic department building on campus is open from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday - Friday, and from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. on game Saturdays (8:30 a.m. - 11:00 a.m. on day games). The ticket booth southwest of the stadium on Pershing Avenue is open two hours before kickoff on game days and is the site of Will Call. Ticket Office phone number is 946-2474.

LOST AND FOUND

Lost and found items should be given to a stadium usher or brought to the pressbox on the west side of the stadium. During the week, check with UOP Security. Lost children should be brought to the pressbox on the west side of the stadium.

PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEM

All announcements must be approved by the Sports Information Director. No special announcements will be made except in case of gravest emergency. Any other announcements should be cleared with sports information office (946-2472) the week prior to the game. Those expecting emergency calls should leave word with the SID or at the pressbox during the game.

REST ROOMS / CONCESSION STANDS

Rest rooms and concession stands are located on the rim of the stadium behind sections O, H and ZZ.

FIRST AID

A trained nurse is present throughout the game at the pressbox on the west side of the stadium. In addition, the UOP team physician is present on the field with a mobile life support unit in cases of severe medical problems.

PACIFIC CLUB

The Pacific Club, a 1972 gift to the University by alumnus and regent Alex Spanos, is on the east side of the stadium and is one of the finest stadium club facilities in the country. Club privileges, as well as theatre-seating below the club, are reserved for members of the Pacific Athletic Foundation. For information, contact PAF Executive Director Mike Milhaupt, 946-2472.

Tiger VB Team Here Monday; Shooting For National Title

Coach Terry Liskevych's UOP women's volleyball team will open its 1982 season Monday against San Jose State at the 6,000-seat A.G. Spanos Center. The seventh-year coach is hoping his team will close its season in the same locale, Dec. 19.

That's because Pacific will be hosting its first ever national championship—the 1982 NCAA Volleyball Finals—at the Spanos Center in 1982 with the semis being played Dec. 17 and the title match two nights later. For the fourth straight year, the Tigers should be in the thick of the race for the national crown.

"I think there will be about five teams with a legitimate chance when December comes around," says Liskevych, who places his own squad with defending titlist USC, UCLA, and Hawaii in the frontrunner category.

UOP wound up fourth last year, second in 1980 and fourth in 1979. The 1982 club will not have the "stars" that made up past teams but may be as good as any aggregation Liskevych has fielded to date.

"This will be the most balanced team we've ever had at UOP," says the 34-year-old mentor. "There may be a lot of teams around the country as strong as we are in the first five or six positions, but from 1-to-12, no one will match our strength."

"We also have a lot of people who are very good all-around which makes us that much deeper—so many of our players can play a number of positions."

The Tigers will be young but experienced. Captain Karen Jacobsen is the lone senior and five returning sophomores—Jan Saunders, Robin Burns, Eileen Dempster, Linda Vaughn and Lisa Franco—were key members of last fall's team as freshmen.

Saunders, a setter, and frontcourt aces Burns and Dempster each gained all-conference laurels in 1981, yet according to Liskevych,

TERRY LISKEVYCH
Most Balanced Team

KAREN JACOBSEN
Lone Senior

nobody has a starting spot locked up.

"The competition is keener than in years past because we don't really know who the starters will be and I think that's a good situation," says Liskevych. "Seeing how some of the positions shape up is going to be very interesting."

Saunders, the incumbent setter, will be challenged by freshmen Julie Maginot from Chicago. Saunders and Maginot both played in the U.S. Sports Festival in Indianapolis, IN, last summer.

At the crucial middle blocker slot, Liskevych will have Burns, Dempster and vastly improved junior Jody Schauer available. Dempster was also a Sports Festival participant.

At outside hitter, Vaughn, Franco, Jacobsen, junior Cathy Lumb, freshmen recruits Therese Boyle and Andrea Markel and walk-ons Pam Burdue and Denise Jezyski will vie for playing time. Boyle was yet another Sports Festival player and should be one of the nation's top freshmen. Dempster will also see work at this position. Lumb will miss much of the season with a foot injury.

As always, the schedule is formidable. UOP will play nine teams that won NCAA Playoff berths in 1981, meeting several more than once. The Tigers will again host two tournaments, the UOP Invationals (Sept. 18-19) and the Wendy's Classic (Oct. 29-30). The UOP Invitational will include Wyoming, Stanford and Houston and the Wendy's Classic, regarded as the premier four-team tournament in the nation, will feature UCLA, Hawaii and UC Santa Barbara, all NCAA title contenders. On Sept. 22, UOP will host Oregon State, to be followed by a men's match between the U.S.A. and Poland. And, of course, there's the NCAA's in December for the four best teams in the country.

"We don't have the big names, the All-Americans we've had in other years, but I think we'll be right there in December," says Liskevych. "Depth is so important in the format of the national tourney. A team has got to play four or five good matches to make it all the way."

"With the number of excellent players we have from top to bottom, someone's always going to be hot."

Howard Conn

UOP's Pacific Athletic Foundation (PAF) Director Mike Milhaupt calls Howard Conn, "the ideal booster." Always positive in his involvement and in tune with the philosophy of the program, the 46-year-old criminal defense lawyer from Sacramento is a caring, dedicated Tiger supporter.

A season ticket holder since the days of Homer Smith and a PAF member for eight years, Conn got his introduction to UOP athletics while a student at Pacific's McGeorge School of Law in Sacramento. He's been hooked ever since. In fact, he's even scheduled vacations so he and his family can enjoy Tiger football and basketball games on the road.

He's currently the vice president of the PAF Board of Directors, works on the annual fund drive and has been involved with the UOP's Sacramento Booster group.

Conn entered McGeorge at the age of 25 and after graduating in 1969, took a position with the Public Defender's Office where he is now Supervisor of the Major Crimes Division. It's a second career for the Montana native.

Before returning to school and getting into the law profession, Conn worked 15 years for the Aerojet-General Corporation in Sacramento as an emissions spectrographer. As a highly-trained lab technician, he did research that led to the development of missiles and aerospace engines that were used in the Titan and Polaris projects and later took men to the moon.

Conn and his wife Jacquelin have a daughter Lori, now married, and two stepchildren, Richard and Kathleen. He's lived in Sacramento since graduating from high school.

Job Placement, New Facility Attract Students to School of Engineering

So you want to get a college degree and are uncertain just what direction you want to go, but definitely want to pursue a course that will get you out in the working world as soon as possible at a good salary.

Well how does 100 percent job placement at an average starting salary of $24,500 sound? That's the type of security an engineering degree from University of the Pacific can give you.

Dr. Robert Heyborne, Dean of UOP's School of Engineering is justifiably proud of the record compiled by his students and since arriving at Pacific in 1969 has seen engineering enrollment skyrocket from 59 students his first year to in excess of 500 in the fall of 1982. The reasons are clear.

"It's a well known fact that with educational costs going up, fewer and fewer students are opting for programs that do not lead to an ability to make a living," said Heyborne, holder of B.S. and M.S. degrees from Utah State and a Ph.D from Stanford. "The demand for engineers is far greater than the supply and, in essence, we've placed every one of our students directly into a job immediately following graduation." But why Pacific instead of another institution?

"I think the popularity of engineering at UOP is directly attributable to our co-op program," continued Heyborne. "The engineering degree takes five years and the co-op is mandatory.

"Our students must have one full year of on-the-job, paid, practical experience. I believe UOP is the only school on the West Coast with such a required program."

In the co-op program, the school takes the responsibility of lining up jobs for students and makes sure they're working side-by-side with engineers in the discipline of their choice. The average income during the co-op year is $13,000.

The student population in the school of engineering has also climbed because the department has broadened not only the scope of its curriculum but the facilities available. The most obvious structural addition is the new (and as yet unnamed) engineering building, located just south of Baun Hall, the original engineering facility.

The new building, erected at a cost of $1.6 million by Vanbilt Construction of Stockton, had ground broken in April of 1981, was first put into use last April and will be fully functional this fall. Its completion further expands the features offered by the school.

"The primary purpose of the new building was to allow expansion of curriculum to include the mechanical engineering major," said the 58-year-old Heyborne. "Four of the six laboratories housed there will be utilized in that area and it will also give us new capabilities in drafting, soil mechanics and hybrid microelectronics."

The school of engineering now offers six different majors—electrical engineering (an extremely broad field dealing primarily with the generating, distributing and utilization of power), computer engineering (an off-shoot of electrical specifically for computers), civil engineering (based in the area of public works design such as highways, buildings, construction, etc.), mechanical engineering (like civil but more involved with testing and utilization of materials in design and manufacturing), management engineering (blend between basic engineering fundamentals and the school of business and public administration) and engineering physics (blend between electrical engineering and physics, for the student interested in the application of physics rather than pure theory).

UOP, whose engineering school has been in existence since 1924, had civil, electrical and management majors when Heyborne came on the scene. Computer was added in 1978, physics in 1981 and mechanical started up in '82.

"In five years, our new programs will have run the full cycle, we'll have graduated students in mechanical engineering and will be working towards accreditation," smiles Heyborne. "We've got an outstanding faculty and a very high quality program. Our 1986 grads will be another milestone."

The new facility is merely Phase I of the school of engineering expansion. Phase II, which hopefully will be implemented in the not too distant future, will see new faculty offices and labs constructed in what is currently Anderson Dining Hall. But for now, the spotlight is focused on the attractive brick structure which sits where Knoles Ave. once spilled into Stagg Way.

Designed and built with an eye towards the brick and ivy look dominant throughout most of the campus, the new pride of the school of engineering also evokes an airy, open atmosphere that Heyborne feels reflects one of his program's strongest features—a warm relationship between faculty and student.

"We've always been very proud of the high morale in our department and would like to feel that the environment of our classrooms, labs and study areas encourages an openness," said Heyborne, who believes one of the most important rooms in the whole department is a faculty-student lounge located above the fluids lab in the Baun Hall annex. It's a place where faculty and students can relax, converse and discuss ideas in an informal atmosphere. "The relationship between engineering faculty and students has always been a good one."

"It's the glue that holds us together." And makes the school of engineering one of Pacific's most popular and productive.

O'Neill's Tigers To Be Young, Aggressive

UOP's second year in the fabulous, 6,000-seat A.G. Spanos Center will also mark the first year of Tom O'Neill's reign as head coach of the Tigers.

An assistant at Pacific for the last three seasons and, before that, an ultra-successful head coach at Stockton's St. Mary's High School, O'Neill's inaugural UOP squad will be young and somewhat short on experience but "is going to be aggressive, defense-minded and play very, very hard," according to the new mentor.

O'Neill will be counting on his two seniors—center Steve Howard and forward Laurence Held—for both production and leadership. Howard was second in both scoring and rebounding to Matt Waldron last year while Held has been a three-year starter for the Tigers.

The pair heads up an extremely deep frontcourt that should make for some interesting battles for starting positions. Howard will compete with improving sophomore Dave Karkenny and highly-touted freshman Andy Franklin in the pivot.

At power forward the Tigers can call on freshman redshirt Rich Anema, junior Graham Taylor, sophomore Kevin Crabtree and freshmen Joe Fabian and Franklin, who could play at any of the three front-line spots.

Held tops the list at small forward but will be challenged by the likes of electrifying sophomore Andy Rodgers, an All-PCCA Freshman team pick last year, Weber State transfer Malcolm Davison, Crabtree and Franklin.

At guard, the starting tandem of John Leidenheimer and Jeff Andrade returns. The former paced the Tigers with 100 assists last year. Battling those two will be a trio of freshmen—Dean Andretta, Kyle Pepple and Don Thomas. Overall, the talent looks better in the backcourt but experience will be a bit thin.

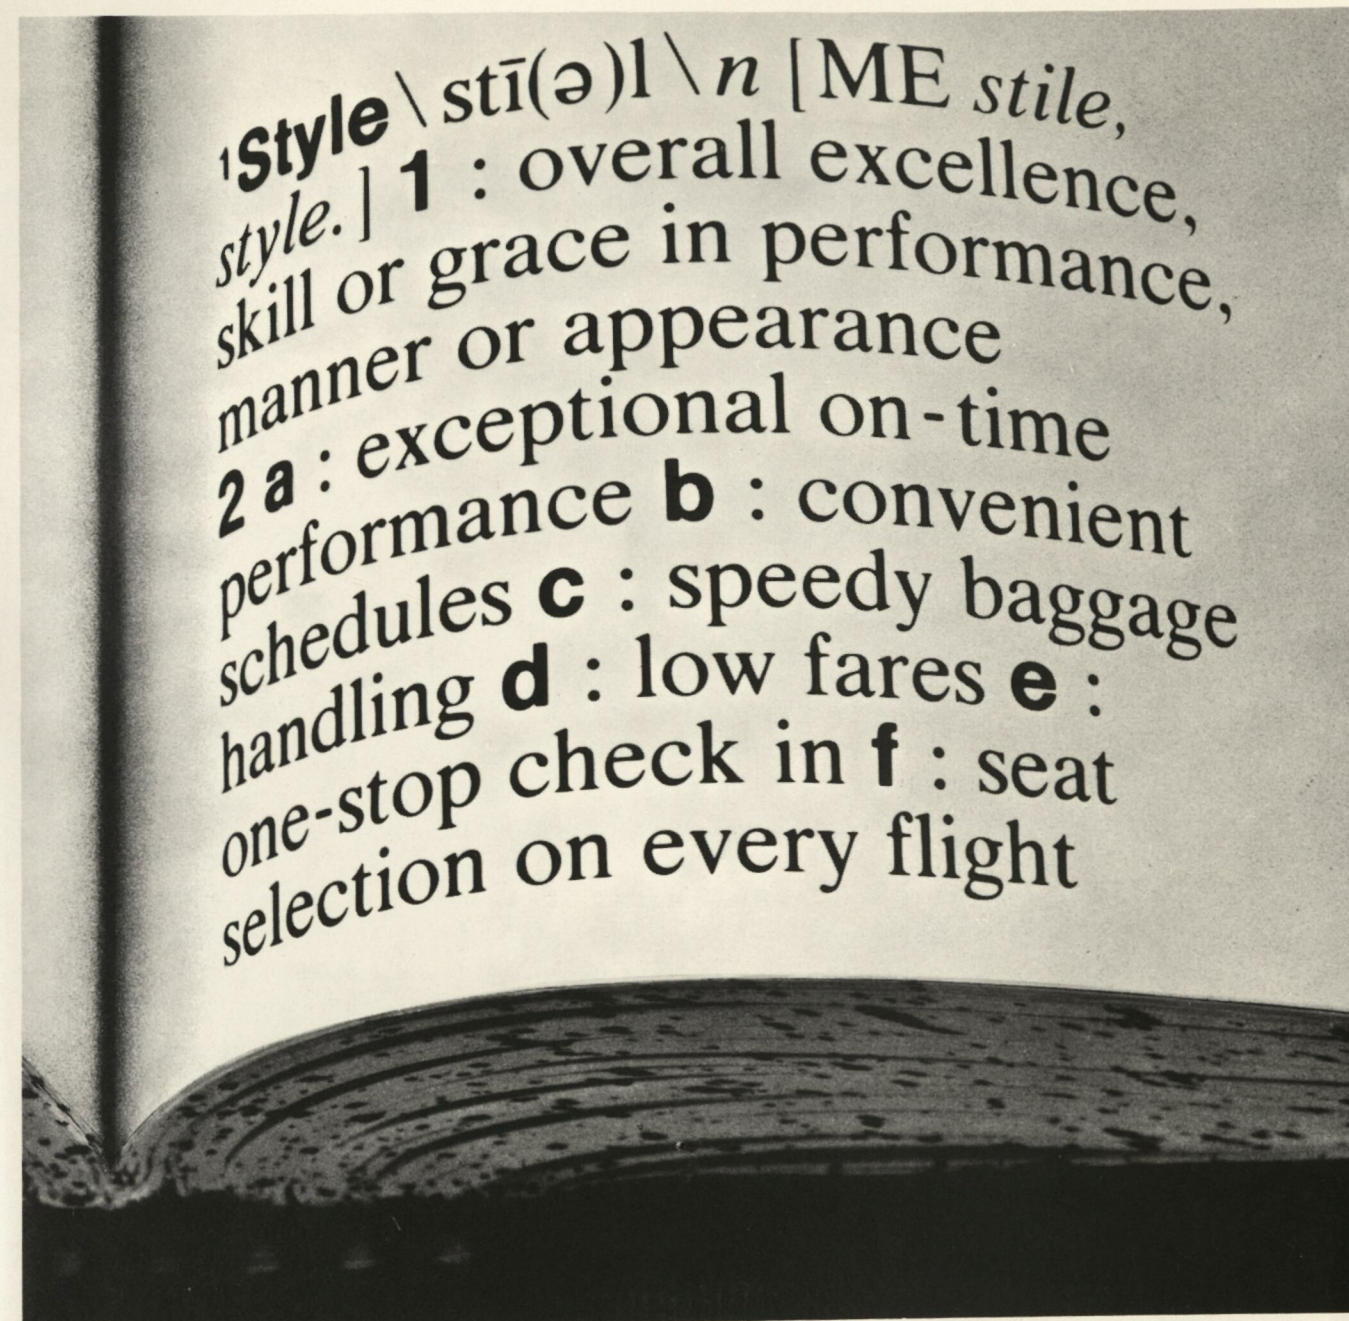

O'Neill is hopeful his club can jell quickly because it will be facing a torturous schedule that includes five teams that went to post-season play in 1981-82 and one, Houston, that made the NCAA Final Four. The 13-game home slate includes the full complement of PCAA contests, rounded out this year with conference newcomer Nevada-Las Vegas. The non-conference home games will be against Portland, Washington, Weber State, Montana and nationally-ranked Wichita State.

Obviously, there's going to be a lot of action at the Spanos Center this season and you'll want to be part of it. To order season tickets, call (209) 946-2474. That's Tiger basketball at the Spanos Center.
