History of the School

THE SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL STUDIES (SIS) is the newest school at University of the Pacific. It grew out of the innovative programs of two of the three former "cluster colleges" (Callison and Elbert Covell) and the international majors offered by College of the Pacific. The first graduate in an international discipline was Richard Pedersen, valedictorian of the class of 1946, who became Deputy U.S. Representative to the United Nations Security Council, Ambassador to Hungary, and President of American University in Cairo. He is now a member of this school's Advisory Board.

SIS was established in 1987 with a gift from George and Isabelle Wilson. Funded by a grant from the Consortium for the Advancement of Private Higher Education, faculty designed an interdisciplinary program, which combines the study of politics, economics, history, anthropology and geography. Under the leadership of the first dean, Dr. Cortlandt Smith, the school was recognized for its unique approach to the study of international affairs.

In April 2003, the University announced a $200 million Comprehensive Campaign, "Investing in Excellence," to launch an aggressive effort to build Pacific's endowment for scholarships, faculty, and programs, and to invest in new facilities and renovation. SIS is raising $5 million for faculty positions and scholarships. Endowed faculty positions that attract the most accomplished faculty, endowed scholarships that attract the best students from the nation and the world, and new and dynamic facilities to accommodate the expected growth will enable SIS to achieve its full potential as a leader in international and intercultural studies.

The school's program has evolved to emphasize its character as a professional school. Cross-cultural training and study abroad are central to the curriculum. All SIS students are required to live overseas. Students gain competency in a second language; they develop research and analytical skills; and many pursue internships to gain insight into the many career options available to them. SIS graduates have taught international relations in Uganda, advised U.S. corporations in China, worked for the government of Chile, worked in banking in Japan, reforestation in Mali, and food distribution in Central Asia. They also sail the Pacific Ocean protecting whales, and work with the Russian Duma in Moscow.

There is a special type of student who comes to SIS—the person who gets excited hearing a foreign language, who can't wait to get on a plane for an exotic destination, who wants to make a difference in our world. The small size of this school epitomizes Pacific's student-centered approach to learning with personalized attention and close contact among faculty and students.

In the spring of 2001, SIS, in partnership with the Intercultural Communication Institute in Portland, Oregon, established a distinctive Master of Arts program in Intercultural Relations (MAIR). The MAIR degree provides students with the skills and understanding to respond appropriately to the challenge of working across cultures in both national and international organizations, and to meet the demands of managing and harnessing complex cultural diversity in our increasingly multicultural society.

Profile of Pacific

UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC is an independent, co-educational university serving more than 6,000 students on three campuses in Northern California. It was established by pioneer Methodist ministers in 1851 as California's first chartered institution of higher learning. Pacific has earned widespread recognition for its student-centered approach to education, its many firsts and innovations, and the accomplishments of its 50,000 living alumni.

As an innovator and leader in higher education, Pacific provided the West Coast with its first medical school in 1858 (which later became part of Stanford and today is California Pacific Medical Center), its first coeducational campus in 1871, and its first conservatory of music in 1878. In the 1960s, Pacific was the first university in the nation to offer "cluster colleges." It was the nation's first to offer an undergraduate teacher corps program, the first to send an entire class to an overseas campus and the first to establish a Spanish-speaking inter-American college, and the first to offer a four-year graduation guarantee. By moving from San Jose to Stockton in 1924, Pacific became the first private university in the Central Valley. Shortly after occupying the new campus, Pacific established one of California's earliest schools of education. It was renamed the Gladys L. Benerd School of Education in 1992 in honor of the alumna's endowed gift.

Pacific has enjoyed extraordinary stability in administration. Only five presidents have headed the University since locating in Stockton. Dr. Donald V. DeRosa began his service in 1995 as the fifth President since 1924 and the 23rd since 1851.

The University experienced its greatest growth and an expansion into graduate professional education under the administration of Dr. Robert Burns (1947-1971). The School of Pharmacy opened in 1955. It is now the Thomas J. Long School of Pharmacy and Health Sciences, in honor of the benefactor and regent who with his brother Joseph Long founded Longs Drugs Stores. In 1956 the graduate school was created, and in 1957 the School of Engineering was established. In 1962, the College of Physicians and Surgeons, a school of dentistry founded in San Francisco in 1896, was acquired by the University and became the San Francisco campus. In 2004, the school was named the Arthur A. Dugoni School of Dentistry in honor of its dean for 26 years. It was the first time any university in the U.S. or Canada had named its dental school for the current dean.

A new concept in higher education in the United States found expression in the establishment of cluster colleges in the 1960s. These colleges adapted the Oxford and Cambridge model to an American setting, integrating faculty and students into living and learning communities. The first, Raymond College, was established in 1962. A second followed in 1963 with the opening of Elbert Covell College, the first bilingual-bicultural college in the country. A third, Callison College, was established in 1967 and focused on non-western studies with a year of study in an Asian culture. The cluster colleges were ended in 1982. However, their emphasis on global education continued in a new School of International Studies, the first university-based undergraduate school of international studies in California. The learning community concept of the cluster colleges was strengthened in College of the Pacific, the liberal arts and sciences core of the University, recognized for preparing responsible citizen leaders who will contribute in lasting ways to careers and communities.

The expansion of graduate professional education continued when McGeorge College of Law, an independent law school founded in Sacramento in 1924, merged with the University in 1966 as the McGeorge School of Law. In 1977, the department of business administration in College of the Pacific was reorganized as the School of Business and Public Administration. In 1995 it was renamed Eberhardt School of Business in honor of the Eberhardt family's endowed gifts. In 1985 programs designed specifically for adult "re-entry" students were reorganized and revitalized through University College, with further reforms and expansions a decade later in a Center for Professional and Continuing Education.

As the University's Sesquicentennial Year of 2001 approached, a new era of expansion and innovation began. In 1992 Pacific offered the nation's first "four-year guarantee," a promise to students that they will graduate on time if they meet certain requirements or they will not be charged additional tuition for courses necessary to finish the degree. Accelerated programs were initiated by President DeRosa, enabling students to complete undergraduate studies in combination with professional degrees in pharmacy, law, dentistry and business in one to three fewer years than required at many other universities.

In 1999 jazz legend Dave Brubeck and his wife Iola, both Pacific graduates, announced that their papers, recordings and memorabilia would be deposited at Pacific for study and research. In response to this gift, a treasure of historic American music and memorabilia, President DeRosa announced formation of The Brubeck Institute for the study, promotion and performance of American music.

Adding emphasis to the Sesquicentennial Celebration in 2001, Pacific completed or launched more than $40,000,000 in new construction and facilities improvements, including a 200-person residence hall, the first in more than two decades, an Art and Geosciences Center, a science laboratory building and a $21-million health sciences learning center and clinic. Since then, the University has added a second new residence hall, greatly expanded its student fitness center and completed a new Humanities Center. It is now completing an addition and renovation of the library. The law school in Sacramento is planning to add new housing and conduct a major renovation of its library. The dental school in San Francisco has state-of-the-art facilities.

Pacific's progress and leadership in higher education have earned national recognition. The University is ranked in the top four "best values" of doctoral level universities on the West Coast, is included in many top ten or top five lists for attention to students, financial aid, career placement and student counseling, and for the Stockton campus, which was ranked as sixth most beautiful campus in the nation. The three professional schools, dentistry, law, and pharmacy, have all achieved national prominence.

In 2002 the University adopted its second six-year Plan, and in April 2003 it announced a comprehensive campaign to raise $200 million by 2007. By April 2005, the University had raised more than $153 million. The Dugoni School of Dentistry had exceeded its $50 million goal and established a new goal of raising $65 million by June 2007.

The University is guided by a vision statement that inspires us to achieve excellence: "University of the Pacific will be among the best national universities, known for linking liberal arts and professional education at both undergraduate and graduate levels through distinctive, innovative curricular and co-curricular programs of exceptional quality and high value. Pacific will become a national leader in the creative use of experiential learning and leadership development."

Historical Significance of the Mace

ORIGINALLY A WEAPON OF OFFENSE used in medieval warfare by a king or a noble, the mace has been refined to a symbolic device used on ceremonial occasions. The mace, as an academic symbol, dates back to 16th century England when Queen Elizabeth I presented a replica of her own royal mace to the corporation of the University of Oxford. She ordered that it be used in all ceremonies to represent the royal presence and the authority given to the university to grant degrees under the royal insignia. King Charles I made a similar gift to Cambridge University in 1625.

Robert E. Burns, Pacific president from 1946-1971, asked Stuart Devlin, an internationally known London silver designer, to create the University of the Pacific Mace. It was commissioned in recognition of the University's transition from a college to a university with several colleges and professional schools that were to be modeled after Oxford and Cambridge. It was first used at a Founders Day ceremony on March 6, 1966, and is constructed entirely of silver with a gold plated seal of the University in its head. The mace is approximately four feet long and weights 15 pounds. It was a gift from Mrs. Winifred Olson Raney, a regent of the University. The mace is displayed at all official University functions and generally is carried by the chair of the Academic Council at Convocation and Commencement ceremonies.
