Yosemite Valley
May 12 1872.

Dear Mrs Carr, The plants from Mrs Yelverton wh you kindly forwarded, are here, I have been writing a dozen letters but my pen slips wholly frictionless only to a few.

I wish you here in this morning beauty, away from & out of your hard-earned cares, glorious light fills our bath gorge today & you would speedily melt in the Godful flux.

It is the time of leaves, & they are falling from the sun covering all the meadows & trees flake by flake like a bounteous grace of snow. Clouds of plant-color. They are a revelation - a thus - earth - the Lord of color, given in songs of summer leaves off from the Whirling sun.

I know how intensely my studies have increasing remnants of truth & I will seek to be true to them although all the world of the world of Beauty beside these mountains, burn & nebulize back to later smoke

You love this purple & yellow, & green - these warm sunsongs of color, but I must edge in a kind word for ice, Glaciers are paper manufacturers & they prepped these mountains & made the meadowy sheets on wh this leaf music is written

Are you planning for our mountain better land

I was on Clouds Peak yesterday & enjoyed a very vigorous snowstorm. Did you not hear a shout?
Three Avalanches of ice & snow started from the summit of Clouds Peak ridge one after the other in glorious gestures & boomings. I was within a few yards of them.

It will probably be late in June before we can get out among the summits - Snow is very abundant - Arvida & Vernal & the strip of glory between were in great of spirit - life when I passed yesterday. My love to all, John Muir
