Mr. Muir,

Dear Sir:

I have been having some of your cherries, and the name of John Muir is really a scarce name, so I thought I would write you a few lines to see if you were any relation of mine. I was born in Renfrew Shair near Glasgow in Scotland at a little place called Busby. My father's name was "Walter", a farmer at the above named place, and did not know whether you were any relation or not. If you are I would like to hear from you, if it is convenient for you to write to me, or if you were to come and see me I would be glad to see you, or any one of my name. I had a good many relations around there, but it is a long time since I left there. Be pleased to answer this at your earliest convenience, and oblige,

Your humble servant,

John Muir
