Dear Mr. Muir:

Flügel, Green, and I are starting off to-morrow (Friday) morning upon a little run on our bicycles via Walnut Creek to (or toward) Martinez. We should like to make you our objective point, but there is no time to hear from you now unless I telegraph; which I shall do, if we decide to call upon you. I want you and Flügel to meet; Green is also a good man.

If (or when) we arrive, should it not be perfectly convenient for you to entertain us overnight, you will kindly tell me so frankly, will you not? At least we shall hope to see and talk with you; that's the main thing; where and how we sleep and eat is unimportant — I have your love are the mountains of California; the plimposes I have had of it are almost as charming as what I have seen of them; I hope to take it with me to the Series before the summer's close.

Our trip shall be a dusty, disreputable trip of bicycle tramps, but I hope you will be at hand to us.

Cordially & admiringly yours,
Melville B. Anderson
