Dear John Muir:

The Books all came
 but I have been too sick
 to write acknowledgements. I thank you for them more than I can say. To re-read
 the familiar words was next to seeing you in person.

Of course I would not for worlds add an

Muir, but all yours

atone to your toil and care. My desire to have you give to the heathen some little of your great riches was any motive in asking you to talk a wee bit to us. We are such an ignorant lot, and, as a rule, so indifferent
to the greatness and beauty and wonders of the world God has given us
to live in.

My love and blessing
to you always, John.

Dear John Muir:

The Books all came, but I have been too sick to write acknowledgments. I thank you for them more than I can say. To re-read the familiar words was next to seeing you in person.

Of course I would not for worlds add an atom to your toil and care. My desire to have you give to the heathen some little of your great riches was my motive in asking you to talk a wee bit to us. We are such an ignorant lot, and, as a rule, so indifferent to the greatness and beauty and wonder of the world God has given us to live in.

My love and blessing to you always, John.
