Dec. 9, 1911.

Dear Doctor Muir:

It is with very keen regret that I say "Goodbye" without seeing you again. The storm kept me from getting out to meet the friends who came on the Murakina, and kept them from getting ashore until so late that I thought you had gone at two o'clock. I have just learned from Dr. Goding that you did not go until five.

Dr. Goding also told me that you missed your copies of the announcement we published. I am pleased to send you a few more.

I also send some copies of today's "El Día" which contains a brief account of your address.

And now, as I again say goodbye, may I repeat the expression of my sincere appreciation of the great service you have rendered us. Young men here are in general drifting away from all faith and to hear from the heart of so notable a scientist as yourself an expression of a vital and stalwart faith, coupled with a humble reverence, is a wonderful lift to the convictions and faith of us all. I am sure we are more ready than ever to do our part in the work of the world joyously, for having met you joyously, for having

Yours with profound admiration,
P. A. Conard.
