in N.Y. at the public meetings of the Academy of Arts & Letters.
There were some interesting papers.

Mr. Burroughs is as yet undecided about his winter plans, I doubt if he goes as far away from home as California.

I hope there are a lot more of the reminiscences, & that you are well & making other delightful books.

May the new year hold much good for you.

Sincerely yours,

Clara Barrus

My dear Scottie - loving Scot,

I've been following you with delight through all the experiences of your boyhood in Scotland & in the wilderness. How vivid it all is! How it explains you. Such lads! fighting, & even in their games flogging one another! Yet tender hearted initial. My heart warmed to your poor beleft Grandfather

- I wish you had told us more about him.

It was quite a "scotch" for your father to pick up travels with you leads to America, but I'm glad he did it. And you've been seeking out "Scotch" ever since.

Mr. Burroughs has been here & made me a visit - & read aloud both numbers of the Atlantic to me - your articles - & we thoroughly enjoyed them.

Dr. Mann: Ashley was here last week, too. Hermit will now seem to prove that he did not see you last Spring.

I had a delightful visit from Mr. Brown & Mr. Burroughs in Sept. & October. It was good to have them here together.

I wonder if you saw the article I made about you in the December Captives.
They didn't read me the story, so few minor errors got in, I hope it will not displease you in any way.
I saw Mr. Johnson the other day

My dear Scootcher-loving Scot,

I've been following you with delight through all the experiences of your boyhood in Scotland and in the wilderness. How vivid it all is! How it explains you. Such lads! fighting, and even in their games flogging one another! Yet tender hearted withal. My heart warmed to your poor bereft grandfather -- I wish you had told us more about him.

It was quite a "scootcher" for your father to pick up and come with you lads to America, but I'm glad he did it. And you've been seeking out "scootchers" ever since.

Mr. Burroughs has been here and made me a visit and read aloud both numbers of the Atlantic to me -- your articles -- and we thoroughly enjoyed them. Dr. and Mrs. Ashley were here last week, too. Harriet will never cease to grieve that she did not see you last spring. I had a delightful visit from Mr. Browne and Mr. Burroughs in September. It was good to have them here together.

I wonder if you saw the article I wrote about you in the December Craftsman. They didn't send me the proof, and a few minor errors got in. I hope it will not displease you in any way.

I saw Mr. Johnson the other day in N.Y. at the public meetings of the Academy of Arts and Letters. There were some interesting papers.

Mr. Burroughs is as yet undecided about his winter plans. I doubt if he goes as far away from home as California. I hope there are a lot more of the reminiscences, and that you are well and making other delightful books. May the New Year hold much good for you.

Sincerely yours,

Clara Barrus
