LITTLE BIRD

ADNAN HASHTAM

The heaviness of the monsoon drowns
the noise of every breath, muffling sins, covering every inch of my body.
The whimpers of a bird that has yet to fly
are hushed by the storm.

The brown water hides the ground,
The pink flower?
destroyed.
Seeds float to the top.
Mixing and becoming one with scum.

Now, the water reaches my waist,
I reach out to grab the bird,
To comfort it before it inevitably dies
becoming an uncomfortable part of me,
Taking refuge in my heart.

When telling the story of the little bird
the words become impossible to utter.
Building a sanctuary in my throat comfortably living and burning me from inside.
